BBC selects Mindtree for digital testing services

Multi-year, multi-million contract awarded as part of the BBC digital services framework initiative

Bangalore (India) and London (UK), August 12, 2014: Mindtree, a global information technology services company, announced that it has been selected by BBC to test a range of its digital products.

As part of this non-exclusive engagement, Mindtree will deliver and support testing of digital products and applications. Digital products include applications and websites that run on a wide variety of digital and broadcast platforms. Some of them are desktop computers, mobile devices, cloud, integrated digital TV, internet protocol TV, terrestrial, cable, satellite TV and the web.

Mindtree testing services will include functional, non-functional, test management, exploratory, automation and load testing. BBC selected Mindtree for its testing capabilities, test tools expertise and the ability to effectively deliver the engagement.

Ramesh Menon, Senior Vice President and Head of Technology & Media, Mindtree said, "We are excited to be part of the BBC digital services framework. Millions of citizens globally benefit from BBC and we hope to enrich their experience with our superior digital testing capabilities."

Richard Smith, Head of Market Engagement, BBC covers the program details on digital services framework at his blog.
