US economic rebound is patchwork of virus risk and rules

BLOOMBERG
December 22

THE US ECONOMY has splintered along state and city lines, with the speed of the rebound largely dependent on the magnitude of local business restrictions to combat an unending surge in Covid-19 cases.

California and Illinois, where some of the strictest measures have been imposed, saw jumps in state unemployment filings this month that helped push the weekly US total to a three-month high. Both states also had November unemployment rates above the national level of 6.7%. In Florida, where many businesses are permitted to operate at full capacity, state jobless filings have hit the lowest since March and the November jobless rate was below the national average, even with tourism employment still depressed.

And even with a new $900 billion stimulus package approved by Congress late on Monday — extending and boosting relief for unemployed Americans — the road to recovery will continue to be uneven in

California and Illinois, where some of the strictest measures have been imposed, saw jumps in state unemployment filings this month

mostly closed. Yet higher mobility also comes with potentially devastating health consequences. Nationwide, more than 300,000 people have died from Covid-19, and the recent acceleration in infections and deaths is showing little sign of abating. A major problem is that lockdown measures are often reactive — implemented when the virus is already out of control — rather than proactive, said Joshua Barocas, an infectious disease physician at Boston Medical Center. For workers who have managed to keep their jobs, many are faced with choosing their health or their paychecks, he said. "Me beating the drum of 'Stay home, stay home, stay home,' does nothing," Barocas said. "It is a combination of proactive restrictions, coupled with support — for both individuals and businesses — and creative solutions to sort of reduce the overall probability of transmission." The situation has been particularly frustrating to restaurant owners, at least those managing to stay in business.
