Aurionpro and Mastercard partner to bring contactless payments to public transportation in North America

Mumbai, India –October 22, 2026: Aurionpro Transit, a global provider of smart ticketing and payment systems, is building on its partnership with Mastercard to support public transport agencies and government authorities across North America in upgrading transit payment systems and enhancing the passenger experience.

The collaboration aims to make contactless transit payment solutions easier to evaluate, procure, and deploy. This includes supporting practical procurement approaches, repeatable implementation methods, and clear pathways that can reduce complexity while supporting local operational and policy requirements.

Together, the companies aim to help transit agencies and authorities introduce convenient, secure and seamless payment experiences across public transportation, with deployment models that can scale to meet their needs.

Sanjay Bali, CEO of Aurionpro Transit, said:

"We are pleased to work with Mastercard to help transport authorities and operators advance contactless payments and integrated ticketing. By bringing together our transit technology experience and Mastercard's payments expertise, we aim to give agencies practical procurement and deployment options that can support their modernization goals and improve the passenger experience."

Chapin Flynn, SVP, Mastercard Urban Mobility, said:

"Our relationship with Aurionpro reflects a shared commitment to making all forms of mobility more accessible, seamless, and digitally connected. By combining our strengths, and leveraging Merchant Cloud's gateway capabilities, we are enabling agencies to modernize payments and deliver better every day experiences for commuters and visitors across multiple modes of transport."
