Thyssenkrupp profit drop highlights steel merger need

Germany, Nov 24: German industrial company Thyssenkrupp reported a 12% fall in annual operating profit and gave a cautious outlook that underlined the urgency of finding a lasting solution for its struggling steel business.

Backed by activist investor Cevian, which has increased its stake this year to almost 20%, Thyssenkrupp is striving to merge its European steel operations with those of India's Tata Steel to combat overcapacity in the industry.

Thyssenkrupp's Steel Europe division, which accounts for about a fifth of overall sales, reported a 36% drop in adjusted operating profit for the year to the end of September, despite a rally in steel prices toward the end of the period.

"The large fluctuations in raw materials markets show that we must pursue our transformation into a strong industrial group," chief executive Heinrich Hiesinger told a news conference at the company's headquarters on Thursday.

Chief financial officer Guido Kerkhoff left open the possibility that Thyssenkrupp could keep a majority of the European steel business, telling analysts that the key issue was not its ultimate ownership but removing overcapacity.

"The most important thing for us is that by a consolidation and by the underlying plan we can address the issues of overcapacity," he told a call with analysts, adding that a listing would also not resolve the capacity problem.

Thyssenkrupp's Steel Europe division reported a 36% drop in adjusted operating profit for the year to the end of September

He said the company had never stated whether the steel business would be consolidated or not, or what percentage ownership it might consider, declining to elaborate further at this point.

Shares in Thyssenkrupp, which have outperformed the German blue-chip index by 20 percent this year on hopes of steel consolidation, fell as much as 2.9 percent in early trading to be the worst performer in the DAX.

Thyssenkrupp - whose other businesses include elevators, car parts, submarines, plant engineering and metals distribution - said annual adjusted earnings before interest and tax (EBIT) fell to 1.47 billion euros ($1.55 billion).

The Essen-based company forecast a recovery to 1.7 billion euros for the current fiscal year starting in October but that fell short of average analyst expectations of 1.89 billion euros, according to a Reuters poll.

"Thyssenkrupp management are known to provide conservative initial guidance and we do not expect material consensus estimate downgrades," wrote Jefferies analyst Seth Rosenfeld, who rates Thyssenkrupp "buy".
