City of bangle makers looks for change

As Firozabad goes to polls on Sunday, glass workers seek better conditions, higher wages and health care

"I will vote for change." That is what Mohammad Shafeeq, a bangle maker of Firozabad, says he will do on Sunday when the third phase of polling is held in Uttar Pradesh.

What may sound as an oft-cited, cliched expression is anchored in urgent, immediate concerns.

Asked what change means to him, the 22-year-old first-time voter says: "Good working conditions, medical facilities and better wages."

Not just Shafeeq, but many others working at the unit where he's employed, Kohinoor Bangle Industries, will vote for the same cause.

The district of Firozabad, known as the glassmaking hub of India, employs over 20,000 workers in its 7,874 registered industrial units, according to the state government's Department of MSME and Export Promotion website. A majority of these units are bangle manufacturing factories, which produce over 80 per cent of all utility glass products for India's domestic market.

For workers engaged in glass manufacturing, besides low wages and lack of healthcare facilities, closure of factories in the region is one of the major reasons for worry.

"Over 100 factories have closed operations in the past four years, leaving thousands without livelihood. People are ready to work here at 1,400 Celsius degrees (roughly the temperature at which glass gets moulded) for just ₹200 a day," says Shankar Singh, 45, a factory worker.

Citing the health hazards resulting from it, he adds, "Everyone has to die one day. But we are dying every day, inhaling toxic fumes while our hands pick and mould gleaming bangles."

ELECTION WATCH 2022

According to insiders, about 90 per cent of the district's working population is directly or indirectly linked to the bangle industry. Whenever a factory shuts operation, the cost of labour decreases. The rising cost of raw materials and labour, and lack of aid from the government result in factory owners exploiting workers by paying them low wages, they add.

The Covid-19 lockdown and the economic slowdown that followed worsened the conditions for workers.

Irfan Khan, 21, a second-generation worker who lost his father to tuberculosis, says his wages have not increased in the past five years. "Every day is a struggle for survival. If there are more workers looking for employment, on a rare day one might agree to work for ₹100, which I used to get when I started in 2014.

"We are working for 8-10 hours daily with chemicals and toxic gases, but get no medical attention. I fear meeting a similar fate as my father," he says.

The combination of chemicals, heat and glass poses serious health risks for workers. "Most people die of tuberculosis or other fatal infections of the lungs and chest due to the toxic gases," says Chandar Pal, a local doctor.

For women workers, the situation is only worse.

Marzina, a 42-year-old widow, works with 600 men in a factory. She gets paid 30-40 per cent less than her male colleagues, just enough for herself and her three children to live with dignity. "I don't get a widow pension. The government only gives food. I work to give my children better education and life so they don't end up working here," she says.

Asked why factories are shutting operations in UP, Khalid Naseer, the owner of Kohinoor Bangle industries, says that in the past five years the price of natural gas has almost doubled from ₹17 per standard cubic metre. Also, up to 18 per cent goods and services tax on raw materials and the increase in labour cost is breaking the back of this industry, he says.

"The day is not far when glass bangles will only be relics if the government continues to turn a blind eye to this industry. People are closing factories because workers protest demanding high wages, but if we increase product cost buyers protest."

In 2018, the UP government launched the One District One Product (ODOP) scheme to support various stakeholders on financial, technical and managerial fronts. Factory owners say the government brought in ODOP to promote local industries, but add its execution hasn't been as promising.

Alleging that the ODOP scheme in Firozabad has been a failure , former CM and Samajwadi Party chief Akhilesh Yadav recently promised a new glass city in the district if his party formed the government after the Assembly election. "If a new glass hub is required for the development of the state, we will build a new glass industry," Yadav had said.

But until the glass city gets a revamp or aid for its glassware industries, Firozabad with its population of approximately two million will be a shadow of its past.

The many faces of Vajpayee

A biography of India's first non-Congress PM to serve a full term offers an insightful and engrossing narrative

SUHIT KELKAR

In recent years, we have been seeing a number of high-profile releases of biographies of politicians associated with the Sangh Parivar. These books seem to stake their subject's claim to uncle-of-the-nationhood, as if to offer Sanghi alternatives to the Gandhi-Nehrus. In so doing, it's not that facts are always massaged; more usually, calamitous actions are made palatable through generous and glowing interpretations of motives or contexts. The idea, I suppose, is to write an Indian historical narrative that is, if not entirely Congress-mukt, at least one in which Congress figures are diminished and Sanghi characters inflated.

It is in this climate that journalist and novelist Sagarika Ghose has written Atal Bihari Vajpayee, a biography. Straight off, she tells us she is a liberal. The idea of a liberal assessing the life of right-winger Atal Bihari Vajpayee, the first non-Congressman to serve a full term as prime minister of India, raises our expectations of getting a book that inclines not towards PR but critique. In this, the book succeeds, and has many crucial insights delivered in an engrossing narrative — but with one flaw too massive to overlook.

The book shows Vajpayee's rise as a charismatic youth politician of the Sangh to Parliamentarian and finally India's prime minister, a trajectory that also brought Hindu right-wing politics to mainstream respectability, and turned the party he co-founded, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), into a serious contender on Raisina Hill. His most high-profile achievements and failures one expects to read are present in vivid colour — his soaring career taking the BJP to success, his dogged and determined tenure as an opposition politician, his ascent to the premiership, his unprecedented attempts at peace with Pakistan; also, his opportunistically riding the Ram Mandir movement and directly abetting the rath yatra (and, therefore, indirectly the Babri demolition that devastated communal relations). Also, his fiasco of a 13-day government, his inept handling of national security issues right from the hijack of Indian Airlines' IC814 to the damp squib called Operation Parakram, to his swaying readily with the breeze that boosted Narendra Modi after the Gujarat riots. There is plenty here to chew on and relish for avid fans of political nonfiction.

The writing is beautifully wrought, displaying a novelist's aptitude for making a phrase ring and an image lambent. For instance, the passage describing the demolition of the Babri Masjid is among the most visual and well-voiced I've read in years, and there are many such feats of writing.

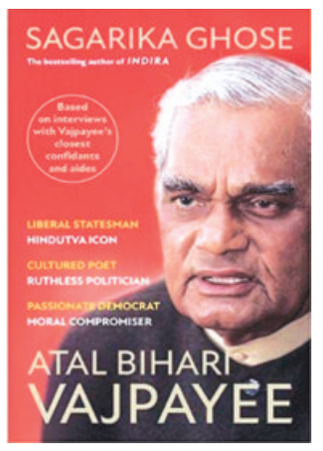

Along with the big picture, the author zooms in on the individual, points out his missteps and deviousness, doublespeak and opportunism, in detail and in refreshingly frank terms. The author's aim, we realise, is to see through the persona of the poet-politician down to the chameleonic person. Vajpayee the politician, we are told, was "(o)ne day a moderate, the next day sounding like a hardliner, one day arguing for pluralism, the next day harking to Hindu sentiments". At another place, we see this: "All through his life, Vajpayee... showed he lacked the strength of character to act against wrong, but still had the sensitivity to be ashamed about his own failings".

BOOKS & IDEAS

Vajpayee's motivations are incisively delineated: his quest for power, the moral cost be damned; his obsession with Jawaharlal Nehru and his descendants, Indira and Rajiv Gandhi; his contradictions and paradoxes, namely his allegiance to his parent organisation, the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), and also his stoking "Hindu nationalism trying to operate within the constraints of democracy".

We are shown how Vajpayee contributed to his image as a "good man in bad company", the bad company being the Sangh Parivar in the few decades following the murder of Gandhiji; and how Vajpayee was the "friend to all, enemy to none", a bridge builder indispensable in BJP's coalition era. We are presented a psychological and social map of his conflicts, internal and external, at being described as a mukhauta or mask of a "moderate" for the Sangh. It's an insightful account of his internal struggles, which evidently were monumental.

As a person, Vajpayee comes across as unconventional to say the least. Vajpayee said, "I am a bachelor, not a brahmachari." What's more, if you think you've consumed all the writing and movies there are about love triangles, wait till you learn here about Vajpayee's domestic arrangement. No spoilers, but imagine the torments that afflicted Vajpayee's parent organisation, the RSS, as it came to terms with him. We are also told of his love of good food in general and specifically meat and alcohol, convivial company, and the public stage. The author explains all this as the traits of a bon vivant and a bohemian. Along the way, we get insights into Vajpayee's relationships with mentors and colleagues in the RSS, and colleagues in the BJP, including L K Advani, Modi and others. We are provided brief portraits of these leaders as well.

The book tells us so much, but misses a crucial detail. I am reminded of Amit Shah's announcement in 2019 that the National Register of Citizens would be compiled. The NRC was enabled in 2003 by an Act of a BJP government under Vajpayee with the consent of the opposition, chiefly the Congress party.

The Vajpayee administration added Section 14A to the Citizenship Act that empowered the government to issue a "national identity card" registering "every citizen of India", and to "maintain a National Register of Indian Citizens". Surely Vajpayee had fathomed the implications? And the Vajpayee-Advani-led government apparently framed rules for drawing up local registers of citizens that, among other things, allowed people to complain that their neighbours were illegal migrants, at which point the accused would be presumed guilty of the alleged offence and have to prove their citizenship. This vision of a society in which people suspect each other has RSS or other Sangh outfits written all over it; Vajpayee probably accommodated them. Yet the 2003 amendment does not find a mention in the book. In an otherwise splendidly wrought book, this is a major flaw; this episode might have forced a radical and more scathing reappraisal of Vajpayee, which might have led the author to a different book.

BRUNCH WITH BS ▸ KIDAMBI SRIKANTH BADMINTON PLAYER

Stoic shuttler

The first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships, Srikanth has seen dizzying heights and deep lows. He chooses to be unperturbed by the ebb and flow of life, writes Vaibhav Raghunandan

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

"It's weird, no?" the face at the other end of the screen says. "It's strange to do this looking into a device." And it is. More so, considering the last time Kidambi Srikanth and I sat down for an interview, it was across from each other, in person, in a hotel room in Delhi. This was late 2017, when Srikanth became only the fourth person in badminton history to win four BWF Super Series titles in one year — a feat that is as rare as it is difficult. A few months on, he went on to become the World No 1 — another first for a male Indian shuttler. It seems a lifetime away but Srikanth remembers — the interview itself vaguely, the phenomenal year fondly.

Since then there has been a churn. During that supremely taxing and profitable season, Srikanth suffered what became a series of unfortunate injuries, a loss of form when in recovery, and a subsequent slide in the rankings, all of which meant from being a shoo-in contender for a medal, he soon became a player desperate to get the ranking points to qualify for the Olympics last year. And he may well have, despite all of it, if it hadn't been for Covid-19. The pandemic meant multiple tournaments were cancelled, leaving him with very few to perform well in to get the points required. Despite all the records and the firsts achieved in the Olympic cycle, he ended up missing out on the Tokyo Olympics itself.

It is late morning, and we are banding together for brunch. Me: at home in Giridih, Jharkhand, with oats, fruits and coffee. He: in his room in Hyderabad, avoiding eating at this random hour (it's around 10 am) because he's on a strict schedule. Nonetheless, he casually sips on a glass of milk.

This nonchalance isn't put on; it is all for real. Kidambi Srikanth refuses to get emotionally drawn out. In 2017, when on a roll, he refused to celebrate his achievements too hard. And, in the aftermath, he has refused to drown in misery. "It was tough missing out on the Olympics, of course," Srikanth says. "But I've learnt to not dwell on things that have passed." Those close to him, his brother K Nandagopal and his childhood friends came together, expecting him to turn inward, but he didn't. Post-Tokyo, as the badminton season put itself back together, Srikanth played tournaments regularly, hoping that he'd be in good form leading into the World Championships — and then almost didn't get there, unable to secure a visa till three days before the event began.

"That's one lesson I think I have learnt. And maybe this pandemic has enhanced it. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should. I just wanted to play... take it one match at a time," says the 29-year-old, smiling gently. The choice of words is deliberate. It's athlete trope but here it means more. When expectations fizzle out, what happens to desire? It seemed less a question of sports than a zen koan: What is the sound of one hand clapping?

In Srikanth's case, this is perhaps his best being. When he thinks less, he does more. And after all the lows , there have been highs.

In December 2021, he went to Spain expecting nothing, only to become the first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships. And then, from that high, again the unexpected. He was back in Hyderabad not out of choice, forced to pull out of the India Open (a tournament he loves playing) having tested positive for Covid-19, and then pulling out of the Syed Modi International to give himself time to recover. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should.

And what you can, are the basics. Train, eat, recover and repeat. Athletes are incredibly nit-picky about their routines, especially when it comes to their diets. Their bodies, after all, aren't just vessels of consciousness but, quite literally, vehicles of gain — but even among them, India's badminton specialists are a step apart. I'd met P V Sindhu when she was a teenager, fresh off winning her first World Championship bronze, and at the time, she'd professed a love for ice-cream and in the same breath admitted she hadn't eaten one in months. She sat across the table, watching me gorge on Hyderabadi biryani for well over an hour. If she was tortured, she didn't show it.

Srikanth is a bit different. "I don't have a favourite food... I like home-cooked food, I guess," he says. His breakfast (home-cooked dosa and chutney) is eaten before he goes for early morning training, and he almost entirely follows through on home-cooked food when not in competition. When in competition, things change, though not drastically.

"To be honest, this bio bubble, being stuck in hotel rooms, doesn't bother me much," he says. What he admittedly does miss is going out to eat in different cities he plays at across the globe. And while his taste in food itself varies very little, it allows him to take in and absorb cultures.

But all things are relative. Discomfort most. Srikanth, while a world-class athlete, is also deeply connected to his roots in Guntur (Andhra Pradesh) and is aware of the devastation the pandemic has wreaked on small communities. "I'm lucky to get to do what I do," he says softly. "If ever I doubt the cards I've been dealt, all I have to do is think about everyone else who doesn't have this."

This is an often overlooked privilege of Indian sport. Many athletes have recently admitted to realising it. Despite the often haphazard and somewhat underfunded grassroots apparatus, infrastructure and facilities have survived. Sponsorships and funding have not dried up entirely.

Even when things are falling around you and unpredictability reigns, you know that your training facilities are still around waiting for you to return.

"It's one of the benefits of the centre (Pullela Gopichand's badminton academy that serves as a training base for almost all of India's top shuttlers) that it's available to us all the time," Srikanth says. "We know that very few people will go there, and those that do are colleagues and teammates... so we are safe." Another long sip of the milk follows.

Withdrawal from the two big home badminton events means that Indian badminton's reluctant prince has yet to be serenaded properly. But for the man who played without expectations and refuses to get drowned by others', this latest rise is narrative flow. Up and down and up again. For now, he's happy to take it as it goes.

"It is good to plan," he says, "but it is important to take things as they go. Everything else will follow." That is the sound of one hand clapping.

Health insurance drives non-life sector growth

Group premiums went up by 30% against 17% in retail segment in FY22

SUBRATA PANDA
Mumbai, 18 February

Health insurance premiums reported a growth of 26 per cent in the first 10 months of FY22. This is nearly double the growth witnessed in the same period a year ago. Health premiums continued the trend of driving growth of the non-life industry ever since the pandemic began.

However, within the health segment, the growth dynamics has changed with group health premiums growing faster than retail health premiums, data of the General Insurance Council showed.

In FY22 so far, group health premiums witnessed a growth of 30 per cent as against 17.28 per cent growth in retail health. Also, the share of group health in the health business of the non-life industry stood at 51 per cent against 39 per cent in the case of retail health.

The monoline standalone health insurers witnessed a 36 per cent growth in health premiums in FY22 so far. Retail health premiums grew by 30 per cent and group health premiums saw 60 per cent growth, albeit on a low base in FY22.

On the other hand, general insurers, who have other lines of business apart from health, witnessed a 22 per cent growth in health premiums upto January 2022, mainly due to group health premiums.

Sanjay Datta, chief —underwriting, claims, reinsurance & actuarial —ICICI Lombard General Insurance, said, "Group health premiums have been growing, given hiring has picked up across the board, especially in the IT sector. Corporates are increasing the limits on their policy and some price correction has also happened. Group health growth is a function of the economy. On the other hand, retail health growth is organic and depends on the awareness and needs of individuals. While the demand for retail health products has always been there, it spiked during the pandemic and is expected to normalise, going forward."

The demand for health insurance products rose in the pandemic because of heightened awareness among the people.

In FY21, health insurance premiums grew by 13.3 per cent with retail health premiums witnessing a growth of 22 per cent. But group health had contracted by 3 per cent in the same period.

Health, as a segment, has become the biggest business for insurers in the non-life insurance space. In FY22 (so far), the health segment constituted 33.34 per cent of the non-life insurers business while motor business constituted 30.89 per cent. In FY21, the health segment constituted almost 30 per cent of the non-life insurers business while the motor segment constituted 34.1 per cent.

The non-life insurance industry saw a five-month high growth rate of 15.9 per cent in January 2022 and was nearly 2.5 times the rate seen in January 2021. In FY22 so far, the non-life insurers reported a 11.6 per cent growth to ₹1.82 trillion.

Motor insurance premiums grew by 3.47 per cent in FY22 so far. Also, crop insurance premiums have shrunk by 2.3 per cent, fire insurance premiums grown by 7.6 per cent in the same period.

Rupee rises 40p to over 2-week high vs dollar

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA
Mumbai, 18 February

Rupee went up 40 paise on Friday —its biggest single-day gain in over three months —to settle at a more than two-week high of 74.66 against the US dollar on Friday on hopes of a diplomatic solution to the East-West standoff over Ukraine.

A fall in crude oil prices also supported the currency, analysts said.

At the interbank forex market, the local unit opened at 75.03 against the greenback and witnessed an intra-day high of 74.60 and a low of 75.05.

Rupee settled at 74.66, registering a rise of 40 paise or 0.53 per cent over its previous close of 75.06. It had closed the session on Thursday at 75.11 (provisionally) but later settled at 75.06.

Poonawalla Fincorp eyes ₹21K-crore AUM

ABHIJIT LELE
Mumbai, 18 February

After seeing flat growth in assets under management (AUM) till Q3 of FY22, Poonawalla Fincorp (PFL) expects to increase the monthly disbursement of loans from around ₹600 crore now to ₹1,000 crore till March 2023.

It is looking to cross AUM of ₹21,000 crore by the end of next financial year (FY23). Thereafter, it plans to expand the book at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 30-32 per cent.

Its AUM was flat at ₹15,228 crore at the end of December 2021 against ₹15,006 crore in December 2020. It was ₹15,275 crore in September 2021.

On the flat growth in assets, the firm said the consolidated AUM consists of certain discontinued loan products. This didn't allow a significant ramp up in the initial year or so.

It discontinued some products as they involved high cash collections, high opex and high credit costs. The run-down in that book offsets the growth seen in the continued or focused product lines, PFL told Business Standard.

Tower...

In the letter, Tower Semiconductor had reportedly called for Prime Minister Narendra Modi's intervention to fast-track a government proposal for chip manufacturing. It had also written six months after the government started inviting chipmakers to India. The company had also stated that any delay on the government's part would mean that it would be unable to "stay active in the project in the near future".

Fab plan

The government expects investments of around ₹1.7 trillion and 135,000 jobs to be created in the next four years under the PLI scheme for semiconductors, Union Minister Ashwini Vaishnaw had said.

The programme aims to provide attractive incentive support to companies/consortia that are engaged in Silicon Semiconductor Fabs, Display Fabs, Compound Semiconductors / Silicon Photonics / Sensors (including MEMS) Fabs, Semiconductor Packaging (ATMP / OSAT), Semiconductor Design.

Oil & gas...

"We are conducting a survey in the Andamans. In all, an investment of ₹3,000 crore has been made over four years across the country. It will require ₹1,500-2,000 crore to better assess the complete sedimentary basins of India," the official quoted above said.

There are 26 sedimentary basins in the country.

"A 2D seismic survey has been almost completed in large areas of the Andaman basin. This survey of 22,500 LKM will be concluded by the end of February 2022," an official overseeing the implementation of the NSP said.

Eyes overseas

While ramping up domestic oil production has been a long-standing strategy, India is banking on its investment overseas in the event of a major global oil supply disruption. This is in addition to a diplomatic outreach towards oil-producing nations to offer crude oil to India on favourable terms.

"We have invested $38 billion till now in 52 assets spread over 22 countries. These hold roughly 21.9 million tonnes of oil equivalent (mmtoe) hydrocarbon assets. This is equal to around 37 per cent of our domestic oil and gas production," a senior oil ministry official said.

CBI...

Another source said the latest investigation is being done on the basis of an FIR filed by the CBI on May 28, 2018, in the colocation (colo) matter. The four-year-old FIR was primarily against Sanjay Gupta, MD of OPG Securities, and it also named his brother-in-law Aman Kokrady and Ajay Shah, a data specialist and researcher employed by the NSE, along with unknown officials of the NSE and Sebi for their role in the controversy.

Sebi...

"Often it is seen that the IPO is priced several times higher than the price at which shares are issued to private investors in months leading up to the IPO. Going ahead, companies will have to provide a detailed rationale for the change in share price over a short-period of time," said an investment banker.

He added that Sebi had a hands-off approach to IPO pricing. But given the sharp fall in share prices, the regulator wants more justification when it comes to pricing the issue.

IndiGo ...

Accordingly, my current intention is to slowly reduce my equity stake in the company over the next five plus years. While new investors should benefit from the potential future growth in the company's share price, a gradual reduction of my stake should also allow me to benefit from some of the upside," Gangwal wrote in his letter to the board.

He said he was stepping down immediately as he did not want to hold access to unpublished price sensitive information while reducing his stake in the company.

"After considerable thought, I see only one clear path to address the issue. Regrettably and effective immediately I am stepping off the board...Sometime in future, I shall consider participating again as a board member," Gangwal wrote.

The promoters modified the articles of association to scrap the clause which gave them the right of first refusal over each other's shares. The amendment was made following an order from the London Court of International Arbitration and passed in a shareholders' meeting last December.

"This move was expected and should bring the feud between the promoters to an end. It is likely that Rakesh Gangwal will seek declassification as a promoter. His large shareholding will have to be sold through bulk deals over a period of time," said Shriram Subramanian, managing director and founder of InGovern Research.

As per current regulations, however, a promoter can seek a reclassification as a public shareholder if his/her equity is below 10 per cent. Also under the Companies Act, shareholders who hold 10 per cent of company stock can requisition an extra-ordinary general meeting. In any case, Gangwal would require Bhatia's support in case he wishes to rejoin the board.

Stock analysts said Gangwal's announcement will keep the company's stock price under pressure. "If the market is aware that such a bulk dilution will happen over a mid-term period, the share price will be under pressure as there will always be opportunity to accumulate stock," an analyst said.

"Gangwal was instrumental in negotiating the initial 100 aircraft order from Airbus and laying the foundation of cost discipline in the airline. After their 2019 dispute, Bhatia managed to appoint all senior positions in the airline and he himself will be in control as managing director," said Captain Shakti Lumba, former head of operations of IndiGo. He added, "I just hope he refrains from micromanaging the airline as that will be the beginning of the end." As per the articles of association of the airline Gangwal is entitled to one board seat.

India, UAE...

"The agreement will open up a lot of opportunities for our MSMEs and provide job opportunities to the tune of 1 million for our youth. It is a win-win for both economies and our people," Goyal said. He said on the pharma side, the UAE for the first time has agreed that medicine or medical products approved by developed countries will get market access and regulatory approval in a time-bound manner of 90 days for being marketed in the UAE. The India-UAE CEPA will be the first of the bunch of trade agreements that India aims to ink with other developed nations over the coming months.

City of bangle makers looks for change

As Firozabad goes to polls on Sunday, glass workers seek better conditions, higher wages and health care

NITIN KUMAR
Firozabad, 18 February

"I will vote for change." That is what Mohammad Shafeeq, a bangle maker of Firozabad, says he will do on Sunday when the third phase of polling is held in Uttar Pradesh.

What may sound as an oft-cited, cliched expression is anchored in urgent, immediate concerns.

Asked what change means to him, the 22-year-old first-time voter says: "Good working conditions, medical facilities and better wages."

Not just Shafeeq, but many others working at the unit where he's employed, Kohinoor Bangle Industries, will vote for the same cause.

The district of Firozabad, known as the glassmaking hub of India, employs over 20,000 workers in its 7,874 registered industrial units, according to the state government's Department of MSME and Export Promotion website. A majority of these units are bangle manufacturing factories, which produce over 80 per cent of all utility glass products for India's domestic market.

For workers engaged in glass manufacturing, besides low wages and lack of healthcare facilities, closure of factories in the region is one of the major reasons for worry.

"Over 100 factories have closed operations in the past four years, leaving thousands without livelihood. People are ready to work here at 1,400 Celsius degrees (roughly the temperature at which glass gets moulded) for just ₹200 a day," says Shankar Singh, 45, a factory worker.

Citing the health hazards resulting from it, he adds, "Everyone has to die one day. But we are dying every day, inhaling toxic fumes while our hands pick and mould gleaming bangles."

ELECTION WATCH 2022

According to insiders, about 90 per cent of the district's working population is directly or indirectly linked to the bangle industry. Whenever a factory shuts operation, the cost of labour decreases. The rising cost of raw materials and labour, and lack of aid from the government result in factory owners exploiting workers by paying them low wages, they add.

The Covid-19 lockdown and the economic slowdown that followed worsened the conditions for workers.

Irfan Khan, 21, a second-generation worker who lost his father to tuberculosis, says his wages have not increased in the past five years. "Every day is a struggle for survival. If there are more workers looking for employment, on a rare day one might agree to work for ₹100, which I used to get when I started in 2014.

"We are working for 8-10 hours daily with chemicals and toxic gases, but get no medical attention. I fear meeting a similar fate as my father," he says.

The combination of chemicals, heat and glass poses serious health risks for workers. "Most people die of tuberculosis or other fatal infections of the lungs and chest due to the toxic gases," says Chandar Pal, a local doctor.

For women workers, the situation is only worse.

Marzina, a 42-year-old widow, works with 600 men in a factory. She gets paid 30-40 per cent less than her male colleagues, just enough for herself and her three children to live with dignity. "I don't get a widow pension. The government only gives food. I work to give my children better education and life so they don't end up working here," she says.

Asked why factories are shutting operations in UP, Khalid Naseer, the owner of Kohinoor Bangle industries, says that in the past five years the price of natural gas has almost doubled from ₹17 per standard cubic metre. Also, up to 18 per cent goods and services tax on raw materials and the increase in labour cost is breaking the back of this industry, he says.

"The day is not far when glass bangles will only be relics if the government continues to turn a blind eye to this industry. People are closing factories because workers protest demanding high wages, but if we increase product cost buyers protest."

In 2018, the UP government launched the One District One Product (ODOP) scheme to support various stakeholders on financial, technical and managerial fronts. Factory owners say the government brought in ODOP to promote local industries, but add its execution hasn't been as promising.

Alleging that the ODOP scheme in Firozabad has been a failure , former CM and Samajwadi Party chief Akhilesh Yadav recently promised a new glass city in the district if his party formed the government after the Assembly election. "If a new glass hub is required for the development of the state, we will build a new glass industry," Yadav had said.

But until the glass city gets a revamp or aid for its glassware industries, Firozabad with its population of approximately two million will be a shadow of its past.

The many faces of Vajpayee

A biography of India's first non-Congress PM to serve a full term offers an insightful and engrossing narrative

SUHIT KELKAR

In recent years, we have been seeing a number of high-profile releases of biographies of politicians associated with the Sangh Parivar. These books seem to stake their subject's claim to uncle-of-the-nationhood, as if to offer Sanghi alternatives to the Gandhi-Nehrus. In so doing, it's not that facts are always massaged; more usually, calamitous actions are made palatable through generous and glowing interpretations of motives or contexts. The idea, I suppose, is to write an Indian historical narrative that is, if not entirely Congress-mukt, at least one in which Congress figures are diminished and Sanghi characters inflated.

It is in this climate that journalist and novelist Sagarika Ghose has written Atal Bihari Vajpayee, a biography. Straight off, she tells us she is a liberal. The idea of a liberal assessing the life of right-winger Atal Bihari Vajpayee, the first non-Congressman to serve a full term as prime minister of India, raises our expectations of getting a book that inclines not towards PR but critique. In this, the book succeeds, and has many crucial insights delivered in an engrossing narrative — but with one flaw too massive to overlook.

The book shows Vajpayee's rise as a charismatic youth politician of the Sangh to Parliamentarian and finally India's prime minister, a trajectory that also brought Hindu right-wing politics to mainstream respectability, and turned the party he co-founded, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), into a serious contender on Raisina Hill. His most high-profile achievements and failures one expects to read are present in vivid colour — his soaring career taking the BJP to success, his dogged and determined tenure as an opposition politician, his ascent to the premiership, his unprecedented attempts at peace with Pakistan; also, his opportunistically riding the Ram Mandir movement and directly abetting the rath yatra (and, therefore, indirectly the Babri demolition that devastated communal relations). Also, his fiasco of a 13-day government, his inept handling of national security issues right from the hijack of Indian Airlines' IC814 to the damp squib called Operation Parakram, to his swaying readily with the breeze that boosted Narendra Modi after the Gujarat riots. There is plenty here to chew on and relish for avid fans of political nonfiction.

The writing is beautifully wrought, displaying a novelist's aptitude for making a phrase ring and an image lambent. For instance, the passage describing the demolition of the Babri Masjid is among the most visual and well-voiced I've read in years, and there are many such feats of writing.

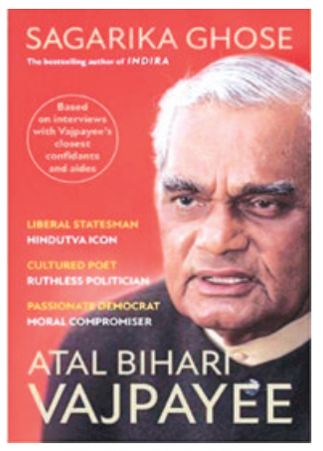

Along with the big picture, the author zooms in on the individual, points out his missteps and deviousness, doublespeak and opportunism, in detail and in refreshingly frank terms. The author's aim, we realise, is to see through the persona of the poet-politician down to the chameleonic person. Vajpayee the politician, we are told, was "(o)ne day a moderate, the next day sounding like a hardliner, one day arguing for pluralism, the next day harking to Hindu sentiments". At another place, we see this: "All through his life, Vajpayee... showed he lacked the strength of character to act against wrong, but still had the sensitivity to be ashamed about his own failings".

BOOKS & IDEAS

Vajpayee's motivations are incisively delineated: his quest for power, the moral cost be damned; his obsession with Jawaharlal Nehru and his descendants, Indira and Rajiv Gandhi; his contradictions and paradoxes, namely his allegiance to his parent organisation, the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), and also his stoking "Hindu nationalism trying to operate within the constraints of democracy".

We are shown how Vajpayee contributed to his image as a "good man in bad company", the bad company being the Sangh Parivar in the few decades following the murder of Gandhiji; and how Vajpayee was the "friend to all, enemy to none", a bridge builder indispensable in BJP's coalition era. We are presented a psychological and social map of his conflicts, internal and external, at being described as a mukhauta or mask of a "moderate" for the Sangh. It's an insightful account of his internal struggles, which evidently were monumental.

As a person, Vajpayee comes across as unconventional to say the least. Vajpayee said, "I am a bachelor, not a brahmachari." What's more, if you think you've consumed all the writing and movies there are about love triangles, wait till you learn here about Vajpayee's domestic arrangement. No spoilers, but imagine the torments that afflicted Vajpayee's parent organisation, the RSS, as it came to terms with him. We are also told of his love of good food in general and specifically meat and alcohol, convivial company, and the public stage. The author explains all this as the traits of a bon vivant and a bohemian. Along the way, we get insights into Vajpayee's relationships with mentors and colleagues in the RSS, and colleagues in the BJP, including L K Advani, Modi and others. We are provided brief portraits of these leaders as well.

The book tells us so much, but misses a crucial detail. I am reminded of Amit Shah's announcement in 2019 that the National Register of Citizens would be compiled. The NRC was enabled in 2003 by an Act of a BJP government under Vajpayee with the consent of the opposition, chiefly the Congress party.

The Vajpayee administration added Section 14A to the Citizenship Act that empowered the government to issue a "national identity card" registering "every citizen of India", and to "maintain a National Register of Indian Citizens". Surely Vajpayee had fathomed the implications? And the Vajpayee-Advani-led government apparently framed rules for drawing up local registers of citizens that, among other things, allowed people to complain that their neighbours were illegal migrants, at which point the accused would be presumed guilty of the alleged offence and have to prove their citizenship. This vision of a society in which people suspect each other has RSS or other Sangh outfits written all over it; Vajpayee probably accommodated them. Yet the 2003 amendment does not find a mention in the book. In an otherwise splendidly wrought book, this is a major flaw; this episode might have forced a radical and more scathing reappraisal of Vajpayee, which might have led the author to a different book.

BRUNCH WITH BS ▸ KIDAMBI SRIKANTH BADMINTON PLAYER

Stoic shuttler

The first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships, Srikanth has seen dizzying heights and deep lows. He chooses to be unperturbed by the ebb and flow of life, writes Vaibhav Raghunandan

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

"It's weird, no?" the face at the other end of the screen says. "It's strange to do this looking into a device." And it is. More so, considering the last time Kidambi Srikanth and I sat down for an interview, it was across from each other, in person, in a hotel room in Delhi. This was late 2017, when Srikanth became only the fourth person in badminton history to win four BWF Super Series titles in one year — a feat that is as rare as it is difficult. A few months on, he went on to become the World No 1 — another first for a male Indian shuttler. It seems a lifetime away but Srikanth remembers — the interview itself vaguely, the phenomenal year fondly.

Since then there has been a churn. During that supremely taxing and profitable season, Srikanth suffered what became a series of unfortunate injuries, a loss of form when in recovery, and a subsequent slide in the rankings, all of which meant from being a shoo-in contender for a medal, he soon became a player desperate to get the ranking points to qualify for the Olympics last year. And he may well have, despite all of it, if it hadn't been for Covid-19. The pandemic meant multiple tournaments were cancelled, leaving him with very few to perform well in to get the points required. Despite all the records and the firsts achieved in the Olympic cycle, he ended up missing out on the Tokyo Olympics itself.

It is late morning, and we are banding together for brunch. Me: at home in Giridih, Jharkhand, with oats, fruits and coffee. He: in his room in Hyderabad, avoiding eating at this random hour (it's around 10 am) because he's on a strict schedule. Nonetheless, he casually sips on a glass of milk.

This nonchalance isn't put on; it is all for real. Kidambi Srikanth refuses to get emotionally drawn out. In 2017, when on a roll, he refused to celebrate his achievements too hard. And, in the aftermath, he has refused to drown in misery. "It was tough missing out on the Olympics, of course," Srikanth says. "But I've learnt to not dwell on things that have passed." Those close to him, his brother K Nandagopal and his childhood friends came together, expecting him to turn inward, but he didn't. Post-Tokyo, as the badminton season put itself back together, Srikanth played tournaments regularly, hoping that he'd be in good form leading into the World Championships — and then almost didn't get there, unable to secure a visa till three days before the event began.

"That's one lesson I think I have learnt. And maybe this pandemic has enhanced it. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should. I just wanted to play... take it one match at a time," says the 29-year-old, smiling gently. The choice of words is deliberate. It's athlete trope but here it means more. When expectations fizzle out, what happens to desire? It seemed less a question of sports than a zen koan: What is the sound of one hand clapping?

In Srikanth's case, this is perhaps his best being. When he thinks less, he does more. And after all the lows , there have been highs.

In December 2021, he went to Spain expecting nothing, only to become the first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships. And then, from that high, again the unexpected. He was back in Hyderabad not out of choice, forced to pull out of the India Open (a tournament he loves playing) having tested positive for Covid-19, and then pulling out of the Syed Modi International to give himself time to recover. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should.

And what you can, are the basics. Train, eat, recover and repeat. Athletes are incredibly nit-picky about their routines, especially when it comes to their diets. Their bodies, after all, aren't just vessels of consciousness but, quite literally, vehicles of gain — but even among them, India's badminton specialists are a step apart. I'd met P V Sindhu when she was a teenager, fresh off winning her first World Championship bronze, and at the time, she'd professed a love for ice-cream and in the same breath admitted she hadn't eaten one in months. She sat across the table, watching me gorge on Hyderabadi biryani for well over an hour. If she was tortured, she didn't show it.

Srikanth is a bit different. "I don't have a favourite food... I like home-cooked food, I guess," he says. His breakfast (home-cooked dosa and chutney) is eaten before he goes for early morning training, and he almost entirely follows through on home-cooked food when not in competition. When in competition, things change, though not drastically.

"To be honest, this bio bubble, being stuck in hotel rooms, doesn't bother me much," he says. What he admittedly does miss is going out to eat in different cities he plays at across the globe. And while his taste in food itself varies very little, it allows him to take in and absorb cultures.

But all things are relative. Discomfort most. Srikanth, while a world-class athlete, is also deeply connected to his roots in Guntur (Andhra Pradesh) and is aware of the devastation the pandemic has wreaked on small communities. "I'm lucky to get to do what I do," he says softly. "If ever I doubt the cards I've been dealt, all I have to do is think about everyone else who doesn't have this."

This is an often overlooked privilege of Indian sport. Many athletes have recently admitted to realising it. Despite the often haphazard and somewhat underfunded grassroots apparatus, infrastructure and facilities have survived. Sponsorships and funding have not dried up entirely.

Even when things are falling around you and unpredictability reigns, you know that your training facilities are still around waiting for you to return.

"It's one of the benefits of the centre (Pullela Gopichand's badminton academy that serves as a training base for almost all of India's top shuttlers) that it's available to us all the time," Srikanth says. "We know that very few people will go there, and those that do are colleagues and teammates... so we are safe." Another long sip of the milk follows.

Withdrawal from the two big home badminton events means that Indian badminton's reluctant prince has yet to be serenaded properly. But for the man who played without expectations and refuses to get drowned by others', this latest rise is narrative flow. Up and down and up again. For now, he's happy to take it as it goes.

"It is good to plan," he says, "but it is important to take things as they go. Everything else will follow." That is the sound of one hand clapping.

City of bangle makers looks for change

As Firozabad goes to polls on Sunday, glass workers seek better conditions, higher wages and health care

NITIN KUMAR
Firozabad, 18 February

"I will vote for change." That is what Mohammad Shafeeq, a bangle maker of Firozabad, says he will do on Sunday when the third phase of polling is held in Uttar Pradesh.

What may sound as an oft-cited, cliched expression is anchored in urgent, immediate concerns.

Asked what change means to him, the 22-year-old first-time voter says: "Good working conditions, medical facilities and better wages."

Not just Shafeeq, but many others working at the unit where he's employed, Kohinoor Bangle Industries, will vote for the same cause.

The district of Firozabad, known as the glassmaking hub of India, employs over 20,000 workers in its 7,874 registered industrial units, according to the state government's Department of MSME and Export Promotion website. A majority of these units are bangle manufacturing factories, which produce over 80 per cent of all utility glass products for India's domestic market.

For workers engaged in glass manufacturing, besides low wages and lack of healthcare facilities, closure of factories in the region is one of the major reasons for worry.

"Over 100 factories have closed operations in the past four years, leaving thousands without livelihood. People are ready to work here at 1,400 Celsius degrees (roughly the temperature at which glass gets moulded) for just ₹200 a day," says Shankar Singh, 45, a factory worker.

Citing the health hazards resulting from it, he adds, "Everyone has to die one day. But we are dying every day, inhaling toxic fumes while our hands pick and mould gleaming bangles."

ELECTION WATCH 2022

According to insiders, about 90 per cent of the district's working population is directly or indirectly linked to the bangle industry. Whenever a factory shuts operation, the cost of labour decreases. The rising cost of raw materials and labour, and lack of aid from the government result in factory owners exploiting workers by paying them low wages, they add.

The Covid-19 lockdown and the economic slowdown that followed worsened the conditions for workers.

Irfan Khan, 21, a second-generation worker who lost his father to tuberculosis, says his wages have not increased in the past five years. "Every day is a struggle for survival. If there are more workers looking for employment, on a rare day one might agree to work for ₹100, which I used to get when I started in 2014.

"We are working for 8-10 hours daily with chemicals and toxic gases, but get no medical attention. I fear meeting a similar fate as my father," he says.

The combination of chemicals, heat and glass poses serious health risks for workers. "Most people die of tuberculosis or other fatal infections of the lungs and chest due to the toxic gases," says Chandar Pal, a local doctor.

For women workers, the situation is only worse.

Marzina, a 42-year-old widow, works with 600 men in a factory. She gets paid 30-40 per cent less than her male colleagues, just enough for herself and her three children to live with dignity. "I don't get a widow pension. The government only gives food. I work to give my children better education and life so they don't end up working here," she says.

Asked why factories are shutting operations in UP, Khalid Naseer, the owner of Kohinoor Bangle industries, says that in the past five years the price of natural gas has almost doubled from ₹17 per standard cubic metre. Also, up to 18 per cent goods and services tax on raw materials and the increase in labour cost is breaking the back of this industry, he says.

"The day is not far when glass bangles will only be relics if the government continues to turn a blind eye to this industry. People are closing factories because workers protest demanding high wages, but if we increase product cost buyers protest."

In 2018, the UP government launched the One District One Product (ODOP) scheme to support various stakeholders on financial, technical and managerial fronts. Factory owners say the government brought in ODOP to promote local industries, but add its execution hasn't been as promising.

Alleging that the ODOP scheme in Firozabad has been a failure , former CM and Samajwadi Party chief Akhilesh Yadav recently promised a new glass city in the district if his party formed the government after the Assembly election. "If a new glass hub is required for the development of the state, we will build a new glass industry," Yadav had said.

But until the glass city gets a revamp or aid for its glassware industries, Firozabad with its population of approximately two million will be a shadow of its past.

The many faces of Vajpayee

A biography of India's first non-Congress PM to serve a full term offers an insightful and engrossing narrative

SUHIT KELKAR

In recent years, we have been seeing a number of high-profile releases of biographies of politicians associated with the Sangh Parivar. These books seem to stake their subject's claim to uncle-of-the-nationhood, as if to offer Sanghi alternatives to the Gandhi-Nehrus. In so doing, it's not that facts are always massaged; more usually, calamitous actions are made palatable through generous and glowing interpretations of motives or contexts. The idea, I suppose, is to write an Indian historical narrative that is, if not entirely Congress-mukt, at least one in which Congress figures are diminished and Sanghi characters inflated.

It is in this climate that journalist and novelist Sagarika Ghose has written Atal Bihari Vajpayee, a biography. Straight off, she tells us she is a liberal. The idea of a liberal assessing the life of right-winger Atal Bihari Vajpayee, the first non-Congressman to serve a full term as prime minister of India, raises our expectations of getting a book that inclines not towards PR but critique. In this, the book succeeds, and has many crucial insights delivered in an engrossing narrative — but with one flaw too massive to overlook.

The book shows Vajpayee's rise as a charismatic youth politician of the Sangh to Parliamentarian and finally India's prime minister, a trajectory that also brought Hindu right-wing politics to mainstream respectability, and turned the party he co-founded, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), into a serious contender on Raisina Hill. His most high-profile achievements and failures one expects to read are present in vivid colour — his soaring career taking the BJP to success, his dogged and determined tenure as an opposition politician, his ascent to the premiership, his unprecedented attempts at peace with Pakistan; also, his opportunistically riding the Ram Mandir movement and directly abetting the rath yatra (and, therefore, indirectly the Babri demolition that devastated communal relations). Also, his fiasco of a 13-day government, his inept handling of national security issues right from the hijack of Indian Airlines' IC814 to the damp squib called Operation Parakram, to his swaying readily with the breeze that boosted Narendra Modi after the Gujarat riots. There is plenty here to chew on and relish for avid fans of political nonfiction.

BOOKS & IDEAS

The writing is beautifully wrought, displaying a novelist's aptitude for making a phrase ring and an image lambent. For instance, the passage describing the demolition of the Babri Masjid is among the most visual and well-voiced I've read in years, and there are many such feats of writing.

Along with the big picture, the author zooms in on the individual, points out his missteps and deviousness, doublespeak and opportunism, in detail and in refreshingly frank terms. The author's aim, we realise, is to see through the persona of the poet-politician down to the chameleonic person. Vajpayee the politician, we are told, was "(o)ne day a moderate, the next day sounding like a hardliner, one day arguing for pluralism, the next day harking to Hindu sentiments". Vajpayee's motivations are incisively delineated: his quest for power, the moral cost be damned; his obsession with Jawaharlal Nehru and his descendants, Indira and Rajiv Gandhi; his contradictions and paradoxes, namely his allegiance to his parent organisation, the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), and also his stoking "Hindu nationalism trying to operate within the constraints of democracy".

We are shown how Vajpayee contributed to his image as a "good man in bad company", the bad company being the Sangh Parivar in the few decades following the murder of Gandhiji; and how Vajpayee was the "friend to all, enemy to none", a bridge builder indispensable in BJP's coalition era. We are presented a psychological and social map of his conflicts, internal and external, at being described as a mukhauta or mask of a "moderate" for the Sangh. It's an insightful account of his internal struggles, which evidently were monumental.

As a person, Vajpayee comes across as unconventional to say the least. Vajpayee said, "I am a bachelor, not a brahmachari." What's more, if you think you've consumed all the writing and movies there are about love triangles, wait till you learn here about Vajpayee's domestic arrangement. No spoilers, but imagine the torments that afflicted Vajpayee's parent organisation, the RSS, as it came to terms with him. We are also told of his love of good food in general and specifically meat and alcohol, convivial company, and the public stage. The author explains all this as the traits of a bon vivant and a bohemian. We are provided brief portraits of these leaders as well.

The book tells us so much, but misses a crucial detail. I am reminded of Amit Shah's announcement in 2019 that the National Register of Citizens would be compiled. The NRC was enabled in 2003 by an Act of a BJP government under Vajpayee with the consent of the opposition, chiefly the Congress party.

The Vajpayee administration added Section 14A to the Citizenship Act that empowered the government to issue a "national identity card" registering "every citizen of India", and to "maintain a National Register of Indian Citizens". Surely Vajpayee had fathomed the implications? And the Vajpayee-Advani-led government apparently framed rules for drawing up local registers of citizens that, among other things, allowed people to complain that their neighbours were illegal migrants, at which point the accused would be presumed guilty of the alleged offence and have to prove their citizenship. This vision of a society in which people suspect each other has RSS or other Sangh outfits written all over it; Vajpayee probably accommodated them. Yet the 2003 amendment does not find a mention in the book. In an otherwise splendidly wrought book, this is a major flaw; this episode might have forced a radical and more scathing reappraisal of Vajpayee, which might have led the author to a different book.

The first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships, Srikanth has seen dizzying heights and deep lows. He chooses to be unperturbed by the ebb and flow of life, writes Vaibhav Raghunandan

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

"It's weird, no?" the face at the other end of the screen says. "It's strange to do this looking into a device." And it is. More so, considering the last time Kidambi Srikanth and I sat down for an interview, it was across from each other, in person, in a hotel room in Delhi. This was late 2017, when Srikanth became only the fourth person in badminton history to win four BWF Super Series titles in one year — a feat that is as rare as it is difficult. A few months on, he went on to become the World No 1 — another first for a male Indian shuttler. It seems a lifetime away but Srikanth remembers — the interview itself vaguely, the phenomenal year fondly.

Since then there has been a churn. During that supremely taxing and profitable season, Srikanth suffered what became a series of unfortunate injuries, a loss of form when in recovery, and a subsequent slide in the rankings, all of which meant from being a shoo-in contender for a medal, he soon became a player desperate to get the ranking points to qualify for the Olympics last year. And he may well have, despite all of it, if it hadn't been for Covid-19. The pandemic meant multiple tournaments were cancelled, leaving him with very few to perform well in to get the points required. Despite all the records and the firsts achieved in the Olympic cycle, he ended up missing out on the Tokyo Olympics itself.

It is late morning, and we are banding together for brunch. Me: at home in Giridih, Jharkhand, with oats, fruits and coffee. He: in his room in Hyderabad, avoiding eating at this random hour (it's around 10 am) because he's on a strict schedule. Nonetheless, he casually sips on a glass of milk.

This nonchalance isn't put on; it is all for real. Kidambi Srikanth refuses to get emotionally drawn out. In 2017, when on a roll, he refused to celebrate his achievements too hard. And, in the aftermath, he has refused to drown in misery. "It was tough missing out on the Olympics, of course," Srikanth says. "But I've learnt to not dwell on things that have passed." Those close to him, his brother K Nandagopal and his childhood friends came together, expecting him to turn inward, but he didn't. Post-Tokyo, as the badminton season put itself back together, Srikanth played tournaments regularly, hoping that he'd be in good form leading into the World Championships — and then almost didn't get there, unable to secure a visa till three days before the event began.

"That's one lesson I think I have learnt. And maybe this pandemic has enhanced it. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should. I just wanted to play... take it one match at a time," says the 29-year-old, smiling gently. The choice of words is deliberate. It's athlete trope but here it means more. When expectations fizzle out, what happens to desire? It seemed less a question of sports than a zen koan: What is the sound of one hand clapping?

In Srikanth's case, this is perhaps his best being. When he thinks less, he does more. And after all the lows , there have been highs.

In December 2021, he went to Spain expecting nothing, only to become the first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships. And then, from that high, again the unexpected. He was back in Hyderabad not out of choice, forced to pull out of the India Open (a tournament he loves playing) having tested positive for Covid-19, and then pulling out of the Syed Modi International to give himself time to recover. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should.

And what you can, are the basics. Train, eat, recover and repeat. Athletes are incredibly nit-picky about their routines, especially when it comes to their diets. Their bodies, after all, aren't just vessels of consciousness but, quite literally, vehicles of gain — but even among them, India's badminton specialists are a step apart. I'd met P V Sindhu when she was a teenager, fresh off winning her first World Championship bronze, and at the time, she'd professed a love for ice-cream and in the same breath admitted she hadn't eaten one in months. She sat across the table, watching me gorge on Hyderabadi biryani for well over an hour. If she was tortured, she didn't show it.

Srikanth is a bit different. "I don't have a favourite food... I like home-cooked food, I guess," he says. His breakfast (home-cooked dosa and chutney) is eaten before he goes for early morning training, and he almost entirely follows through on home-cooked food when not in competition. When in competition, things change, though not drastically.

"To be honest, this bio bubble, being stuck in hotel rooms, doesn't bother me much," he says. What he admittedly does miss is going out to eat in different cities he plays at across the globe. And while his taste in food itself varies very little, it allows him to take in and absorb cultures.

But all things are relative. Discomfort most. Srikanth, while a world-class athlete, is also deeply connected to his roots in Guntur (Andhra Pradesh) and is aware of the devastation the pandemic has wreaked on small communities. "I'm lucky to get to do what I do," he says softly. "If ever I doubt the cards I've been dealt, all I have to do is think about everyone else who doesn't have this."

This is an often overlooked privilege of Indian sport. Many athletes have recently admitted to realising it. Despite the often haphazard and somewhat underfunded grassroots apparatus, infrastructure and facilities have survived. Sponsorships and funding have not dried up entirely.

Even when things are falling around you and unpredictability reigns, you know that your training facilities are still around waiting for you to return.

"It's one of the benefits of the centre (Pullela Gopichand's badminton academy that serves as a training base for almost all of India's top shuttlers) that it's available to us all the time," Srikanth says. "We know that very few people will go there, and those that do are colleagues and teammates... so we are safe." Another long sip of the milk follows.

Withdrawal from the two big home badminton events means that Indian badminton's reluctant prince has yet to be serenaded properly. But for the man who played without expectations and refuses to get drowned by others', this latest rise is narrative flow. Up and down and up again. For now, he's happy to take it as it goes.

"It is good to plan," he says, "but it is important to take things as they go. Everything else will follow." That is the sound of one hand clapping.

City of bangle makers looks for change

As Firozabad goes to polls on Sunday, glass workers seek better conditions, higher wages and health care

Firozabad, 18 February

"I will vote for change." That is what Mohammad Shafeeq, a bangle maker of Firozabad, says he will do on Sunday when the third phase of polling is held in Uttar Pradesh.

What may sound as an oft-cited, cliched expression is anchored in urgent, immediate concerns.

Asked what change means to him, the 22-year-old first-time voter says: "Good working conditions, medical facilities and better wages."

Not just Shafeeq, but many others working at the unit where he's employed, Kohinoor Bangle Industries, will vote for the same cause.

The district of Firozabad, known as the glassmaking hub of India, employs over 20,000 workers in its 7,874 registered industrial units, according to the state government's Department of MSME and Export Promotion website. A majority of these units are bangle manufacturing factories, which produce over 80 per cent of all utility glass products for India's domestic market.

For workers engaged in glass manufacturing, besides low wages and lack of healthcare facilities, closure of factories in the region is one of the major reasons for worry.

"Over 100 factories have closed operations in the past four years, leaving thousands without livelihood. People are ready to work here at 1,400 Celsius degrees (roughly the temperature at which glass gets moulded) for just ₹200 a day," says Shankar Singh, 45, a factory worker.

Citing the health hazards resulting from it, he adds, "Everyone has to die one day. But we are dying every day, inhaling toxic fumes while our hands pick and mould gleaming bangles."

ELECTION WATCH 2022

According to insiders, about 90 per cent of the district's working population is directly or indirectly linked to the bangle industry. Whenever a factory shuts operation, the cost of labour decreases. The rising cost of raw materials and labour, and lack of aid from the government result in factory owners exploiting workers by paying them low wages, they add.

The Covid-19 lockdown and the economic slowdown that followed worsened the conditions for workers.

Irfan Khan, 21, a second-generation worker who lost his father to tuberculosis, says his wages have not increased in the past five years. "Every day is a struggle for survival. If there are more workers looking for employment, on a rare day one might agree to work for ₹100, which I used to get when I started in 2014.

"We are working for 8-10 hours daily with chemicals and toxic gases, but get no medical attention. I fear meeting a similar fate as my father," he says.

The combination of chemicals, heat and glass poses serious health risks for workers. "Most people die of tuberculosis or other fatal infections of the lungs and chest due to the toxic gases," says Chandar Pal, a local doctor.

For women workers, the situation is only worse.

Marzina, a 42-year-old widow, works with 600 men in a factory. She gets paid 30-40 per cent less than her male colleagues, just enough for herself and her three children to live with dignity. "I don't get a widow pension. The government only gives food. I work to give my children better education and life so they don't end up working here," she says.

Asked why factories are shutting operations in UP, Khalid Naseer, the owner of Kohinoor Bangle industries, says that in the past five years the price of natural gas has almost doubled from ₹17 per standard cubic metre. Also, up to 18 per cent goods and services tax on raw materials and the increase in labour cost is breaking the back of this industry, he says.

"The day is not far when glass bangles will only be relics if the government continues to turn a blind eye to this industry. People are closing factories because workers protest demanding high wages, but if we increase product cost buyers protest."

In 2018, the UP government launched the One District One Product (ODOP) scheme to support various stakeholders on financial, technical and managerial fronts. Factory owners say the government brought in ODOP to promote local industries, but add its execution hasn't been as promising.

Alleging that the ODOP scheme in Firozabad has been a failure , former CM and Samajwadi Party chief Akhilesh Yadav recently promised a new glass city in the district if his party formed the government after the Assembly election. "If a new glass hub is required for the development of the state, we will build a new glass industry," Yadav had said.

But until the glass city gets a revamp or aid for its glassware industries, Firozabad with its population of approximately two million will be a shadow of its past.

The many faces of Vajpayee

A biography of India's first non-Congress PM to serve a full term offers an insightful and engrossing narrative

SUHIT KELKAR

In recent years, we have been seeing a number of high-profile releases of biographies of politicians associated with the Sangh Parivar. These books seem to stake their subject's claim to uncle-of-the-nationhood, as if to offer Sanghi alternatives to the Gandhi-Nehrus. In so doing, it's not that facts are always massaged; more usually, calamitous actions are made palatable through generous and glowing interpretations of motives or contexts. The idea, I suppose, is to write an Indian historical narrative that is, if not entirely Congress-mukt, at least one in which Congress figures are diminished and Sanghi characters inflated.

It is in this climate that journalist and novelist Sagarika Ghose has written Atal Bihari Vajpayee, a biography. Straight off, she tells us she is a liberal. The idea of a liberal assessing the life of right-winger Atal Bihari Vajpayee, the first non-Congressman to serve a full term as prime minister of India, raises our expectations of getting a book that inclines not towards PR but critique. In this, the book succeeds, and has many crucial insights delivered in an engrossing narrative — but with one flaw too massive to overlook.

The book shows Vajpayee's rise as a charismatic youth politician of the Sangh to Parliamentarian and finally India's prime minister, a trajectory that also brought Hindu right-wing politics to mainstream respectability, and turned the party he co-founded, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), into a serious contender on Raisina Hill. His most high-profile achievements and failures one expects to read are present in vivid colour — his soaring career taking the BJP to success, his dogged and determined tenure as an opposition politician, his ascent to the premiership, his unprecedented attempts at peace with Pakistan; also, his opportunistically riding the Ram Mandir movement and directly abetting the rath yatra (and, therefore, indirectly the Babri demolition that devastated communal relations). Also, his fiasco of a 13-day government, his inept handling of national security issues right from the hijack of Indian Airlines' IC814 to the damp squib called Operation Parakram, to his swaying readily with the breeze that boosted Narendra Modi after the Gujarat riots. There is plenty here to chew on and relish for avid fans of political nonfiction.

BOOKS & IDEAS

The writing is beautifully wrought, displaying a novelist's aptitude for making a phrase ring and an image lambent. For instance, the passage describing the demolition of the Babri Masjid is among the most visual and well-voiced I've read in years, and there are many such feats of writing.

Along with the big picture, the author zooms in on the individual, points out his missteps and deviousness, doublespeak and opportunism, in detail and in refreshingly frank terms. The author's aim, we realise, is to see through the persona of the poet-politician down to the chameleonic person. Vajpayee the politician, we are told, was "(o)ne day a moderate, the next day sounding like a hardliner, one day arguing for pluralism, the next day harking to Hindu sentiments". At another place, we see this: "All through his life, Vajpayee... showed he lacked the strength of character to act against wrong, but still had the sensitivity to be ashamed about his own failings".

ATAL BIHARI VAJPAYEE
Author: Sagarika Ghose
Publisher: Juggernaut
Pages: 432 Price: ₹799

Vajpayee's motivations are incisively delineated: his quest for power, the moral cost be damned; his obsession with Jawaharlal Nehru and his descendants, Indira and Rajiv Gandhi; his contradictions and paradoxes, namely his allegiance to his parent organisation, the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), and also his stoking "Hindu nationalism trying to operate within the constraints of democracy".

We are shown how Vajpayee contributed to his image as a "good man in bad company", the bad company being the Sangh Parivar in the few decades following the murder of Gandhiji; and how Vajpayee was the "friend to all, enemy to none", a bridge builder indispensable in BJP's coalition era. We are presented a psychological and social map of his conflicts, internal and external, at being described as a mukhauta or mask of a "moderate" for the Sangh. It's an insightful account of his internal struggles, which evidently were monumental.

As a person, Vajpayee comes across as unconventional to say the least. Vajpayee said, "I am a bachelor, not a brahmachari." What's more, if you think you've consumed all the writing and movies there are about love triangles, wait till you learn here about Vajpayee's domestic arrangement. No spoilers, but imagine the torments that afflicted Vajpayee's parent organisation, the RSS, as it came to terms with him. We are also told of his love of good food in general and specifically meat and alcohol, convivial company, and the public stage. The author explains all this as the traits of a bon vivant and a bohemian. Along the way, we get insights into Vajpayee's relationships with mentors and colleagues in the RSS, and colleagues in the BJP, including L K Advani, Modi and others. We are provided brief portraits of these leaders as well.

The book tells us so much, but misses a crucial detail. I am reminded of Amit Shah's announcement in 2019 that the National Register of Citizens would be compiled. The NRC was enabled in 2003 by an Act of a BJP government under Vajpayee with the consent of the opposition, chiefly the Congress party.

The Vajpayee administration added Section 14A to the Citizenship Act that empowered the government to issue a "national identity card" registering "every citizen of India", and to "maintain a National Register of Indian Citizens". Surely Vajpayee had fathomed the implications? And the Vajpayee-Advani-led government apparently framed rules for drawing up local registers of citizens that, among other things, allowed people to complain that their neighbours were illegal migrants, at which point the accused would be presumed guilty of the alleged offence and have to prove their citizenship. This vision of a society in which people suspect each other has RSS or other Sangh outfits written all over it; Vajpayee probably accommodated them. Yet the 2003 amendment does not find a mention in the book. In an otherwise splendidly wrought book, this is a major flaw; this episode might have forced a radical and more scathing reappraisal of Vajpayee, which might have led the author to a different book.

BRUNCH WITH BS ▸ KIDAMBI SRIKANTH BADMINTON PLAYER

Stoic shuttler

The first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships, Srikanth has seen dizzying heights and deep lows. He chooses to be unperturbed by the ebb and flow of life, writes Vaibhav Raghunandan

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

"It's weird, no?" the face at the other end of the screen says. "It's strange to do this looking into a device." And it is. More so, considering the last time Kidambi Srikanth and I sat down for an interview, it was across from each other, in person, in a hotel room in Delhi. This was late 2017, when Srikanth became only the fourth person in badminton history to win four BWF Super Series titles in one year — a feat that is as rare as it is difficult. A few months on, he went on to become the World No 1 — another first for a male Indian shuttler. It seems a lifetime away but Srikanth remembers — the interview itself vaguely, the phenomenal year fondly.

Since then there has been a churn. During that supremely taxing and profitable season, Srikanth suffered what became a series of unfortunate injuries, a loss of form when in recovery, and a subsequent slide in the rankings, all of which meant from being a shoo-in contender for a medal, he soon became a player desperate to get the ranking points to qualify for the Olympics last year. And he may well have, despite all of it, if it hadn't been for Covid-19. The pandemic meant multiple tournaments were cancelled, leaving him with very few to perform well in to get the points required. Despite all the records and the firsts achieved in the Olympic cycle, he ended up missing out on the Tokyo Olympics itself.

It is late morning, and we are banding together for brunch. Me: at home in Giridih, Jharkhand, with oats, fruits and coffee. He: in his room in Hyderabad, avoiding eating at this random hour (it's around 10 am) because he's on a strict schedule. Nonetheless, he casually sips on a glass of milk.

This nonchalance isn't put on; it is all for real. Kidambi Srikanth refuses to get emotionally drawn out. In 2017, when on a roll, he refused to celebrate his achievements too hard. And, in the aftermath, he has refused to drown in misery. "It was tough missing out on the Olympics, of course," Srikanth says. "But I've learnt to not dwell on things that have passed." Those close to him, his brother K Nandagopal and his childhood friends came together, expecting him to turn inward, but he didn't. Post-Tokyo, as the badminton season put itself back together, Srikanth played tournaments regularly, hoping that he'd be in good form leading into the World Championships — and then almost didn't get there, unable to secure a visa till three days before the event began.

"That's one lesson I think I have learnt. And maybe this pandemic has enhanced it. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should. I just wanted to play... take it one match at a time," says the 29-year-old, smiling gently. The choice of words is deliberate. It's athlete trope but here it means more. When expectations fizzle out, what happens to desire? It seemed less a question of sports than a zen koan: What is the sound of one hand clapping?

In Srikanth's case, this is perhaps his best being. When he thinks less, he does more. And after all the lows , there have been highs.

In December 2021, he went to Spain expecting nothing, only to become the first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships. And then, from that high, again the unexpected. He was back in Hyderabad not out of choice, forced to pull out of the India Open (a tournament he loves playing) having tested positive for Covid-19, and then pulling out of the Syed Modi International to give himself time to recover. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should.

And what you can, are the basics. Train, eat, recover and repeat. Athletes are incredibly nit-picky about their routines, especially when it comes to their diets. Their bodies, after all, aren't just vessels of consciousness but, quite literally, vehicles of gain — but even among them, India's badminton specialists are a step apart. I'd met P V Sindhu when she was a teenager, fresh off winning her first World Championship bronze, and at the time, she'd professed a love for ice-cream and in the same breath admitted she hadn't eaten one in months. She sat across the table, watching me gorge on Hyderabadi biryani for well over an hour. If she was tortured, she didn't show it.

Srikanth is a bit different. "I don't have a favourite food... I like home-cooked food, I guess," he says. His breakfast (home-cooked dosa and chutney) is eaten before he goes for early morning training, and he almost entirely follows through on home-cooked food when not in competition. When in competition, things change, though not drastically.

"To be honest, this bio bubble, being stuck in hotel rooms, doesn't bother me much," he says. What he admittedly does miss is going out to eat in different cities he plays at across the globe. And while his taste in food itself varies very little, it allows him to take in and absorb cultures.

But all things are relative. Discomfort most. Srikanth, while a world-class athlete, is also deeply connected to his roots in Guntur (Andhra Pradesh) and is aware of the devastation the pandemic has wreaked on small communities. "I'm lucky to get to do what I do," he says softly. "If ever I doubt the cards I've been dealt, all I have to do is think about everyone else who doesn't have this."

This is an often overlooked privilege of Indian sport. Many athletes have recently admitted to realising it. Despite the often haphazard and somewhat underfunded grassroots apparatus, infrastructure and facilities have survived. Sponsorships and funding have not dried up entirely.

Even when things are falling around you and unpredictability reigns, you know that your training facilities are still around waiting for you to return.

"It's one of the benefits of the centre (Pullela Gopichand's badminton academy that serves as a training base for almost all of India's top shuttlers) that it's available to us all the time," Srikanth says. "We know that very few people will go there, and those that do are colleagues and teammates... so we are safe." Another long sip of the milk follows.

Withdrawal from the two big home badminton events means that Indian badminton's reluctant prince has yet to be serenaded properly. But for the man who played without expectations and refuses to get drowned by others', this latest rise is narrative flow. Up and down and up again. For now, he's happy to take it as it goes.

"It is good to plan," he says, "but it is important to take things as they go. Everything else will follow." That is the sound of one hand clapping.

City of bangle makers looks for change

As Firozabad goes to polls on Sunday, glass workers seek better conditions, higher wages and health care

NITIN KUMAR
Firozabad, 18 February

"I will vote for change." That is what Mohammad Shafeeq, a bangle maker of Firozabad, says he will do on Sunday when the third phase of polling is held in Uttar Pradesh.

What may sound as an oft-cited, cliched expression is anchored in urgent, immediate concerns.

Asked what change means to him, the 22-year-old first-time voter says: "Good working conditions, medical facilities and better wages."

Not just Shafeeq, but many others working at the unit where he's employed, Kohinoor Bangle Industries, will vote for the same cause.

The district of Firozabad, known as the glassmaking hub of India, employs over 20,000 workers in its 7,874 registered industrial units, according to the state government's Department of MSME and Export Promotion website. A majority of these units are bangle manufacturing factories, which produce over 80 per cent of all utility glass products for India's domestic market.

For workers engaged in glass manufacturing, besides low wages and lack of healthcare facilities, closure of factories in the region is one of the major reasons for worry.

"Over 100 factories have closed operations in the past four years, leaving thousands without livelihood. People are ready to work here at 1,400 Celsius degrees (roughly the temperature at which glass gets moulded) for just ₹200 a day," says Shankar Singh, 45, a factory worker.

Citing the health hazards resulting from it, he adds, "Everyone has to die one day. But we are dying every day, inhaling toxic fumes while our hands pick and mould gleaming bangles."

ELECTION WATCH 2022

According to insiders, about 90 per cent of the district's working population is directly or indirectly linked to the bangle industry. Whenever a factory shuts operation, the cost of labour decreases. The rising cost of raw materials and labour, and lack of aid from the government result in factory owners exploiting workers by paying them low wages, they add.

The Covid-19 lockdown and the economic slowdown that followed worsened the conditions for workers.

Irfan Khan, 21, a second-generation worker who lost his father to tuberculosis, says his wages have not increased in the past five years. "Every day is a struggle for survival. If there are more workers looking for employment, on a rare day one might agree to work for ₹100, which I used to get when I started in 2014.

"We are working for 8-10 hours daily with chemicals and toxic gases, but get no medical attention. I fear meeting a similar fate as my father," he says.

The combination of chemicals, heat and glass poses serious health risks for workers. "Most people die of tuberculosis or other fatal infections of the lungs and chest due to the toxic gases," says Chandar Pal, a local doctor.

For women workers, the situation is only worse.

Marzina, a 42-year-old widow, works with 600 men in a factory. She gets paid 30-40 per cent less than her male colleagues, just enough for herself and her three children to live with dignity. "I don't get a widow pension. The government only gives food. I work to give my children better education and life so they don't end up working here," she says.

Asked why factories are shutting operations in UP, Khalid Naseer, the owner of Kohinoor Bangle industries, says that in the past five years the price of natural gas has almost doubled from ₹17 per standard cubic metre. Also, up to 18 per cent goods and services tax on raw materials and the increase in labour cost is breaking the back of this industry, he says.

"The day is not far when glass bangles will only be relics if the government continues to turn a blind eye to this industry. People are closing factories because workers protest demanding high wages, but if we increase product cost buyers protest."

In 2018, the UP government launched the One District One Product (ODOP) scheme to support various stakeholders on financial, technical and managerial fronts. Factory owners say the government brought in ODOP to promote local industries, but add its execution hasn't been as promising.

Alleging that the ODOP scheme in Firozabad has been a failure , former CM and Samajwadi Party chief Akhilesh Yadav recently promised a new glass city in the district if his party formed the government after the Assembly election. "If a new glass hub is required for the development of the state, we will build a new glass industry," Yadav had said.

But until the glass city gets a revamp or aid for its glassware industries, Firozabad with its population of approximately two million will be a shadow of its past.

The many faces of Vajpayee

A biography of India's first non-Congress PM to serve a full term offers an insightful and engrossing narrative

SUHIT KELKAR

In recent years, we have been seeing a number of high-profile releases of biographies of politicians associated with the Sangh Parivar. These books seem to stake their subject's claim to uncle-of-the-nationhood, as if to offer Sanghi alternatives to the Gandhi-Nehrus. In so doing, it's not that facts are always massaged; more usually, calamitous actions are made palatable through generous and glowing interpretations of motives or contexts. The idea, I suppose, is to write an Indian historical narrative that is, if not entirely Congress-mukt, at least one in which Congress figures are diminished and Sanghi characters inflated.

It is in this climate that journalist and novelist Sagarika Ghose has written Atal Bihari Vajpayee, a biography. Straight off, she tells us she is a liberal. The idea of a liberal assessing the life of right-winger Atal Bihari Vajpayee, the first non-Congressman to serve a full term as prime minister of India, raises our expectations of getting a book that inclines not towards PR but critique. In this, the book succeeds, and has many crucial insights delivered in an engrossing narrative — but with one flaw too massive to overlook.

The book shows Vajpayee's rise as a charismatic youth politician of the Sangh to Parliamentarian and finally India's prime minister, a trajectory that also brought Hindu right-wing politics to mainstream respectability, and turned the party he co-founded, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), into a serious contender on Raisina Hill. His most high-profile achievements and failures one expects to read are present in vivid colour — his soaring career taking the BJP to success, his dogged and determined tenure as an opposition politician, his ascent to the premiership, his unprecedented attempts at peace with Pakistan; also, his opportunistically riding the Ram Mandir movement and directly abetting the rath yatra (and, therefore, indirectly the Babri demolition that devastated communal relations). Also, his fiasco of a 13-day government, his inept handling of national security issues right from the hijack of Indian Airlines' IC814 to the damp squib called Operation Parakram, to his swaying readily with the breeze that boosted Narendra Modi after the Gujarat riots. There is plenty here to chew on and relish for avid fans of political nonfiction.

The writing is beautifully wrought, displaying a novelist's aptitude for making a phrase ring and an image lambent. For instance, the passage describing the demolition of the Babri Masjid is among the most visual and well-voiced I've read in years, and there are many such feats of writing.

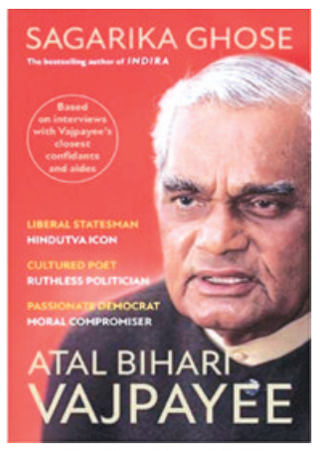

Along with the big picture, the author zooms in on the individual, points out his missteps and deviousness, doublespeak and opportunism, in detail and in refreshingly frank terms. The author's aim, we realise, is to see through the persona of the poet-politician down to the chameleonic person. Vajpayee the politician, we are told, was "(o)ne day a moderate, the next day sounding like a hardliner, one day arguing for pluralism, the next day harking to Hindu sentiments". At another place, we see this: "All through his life, Vajpayee... showed he lacked the strength of character to act against wrong, but still had the sensitivity to be ashamed about his own failings".

BOOKS & IDEAS

Vajpayee's motivations are incisively delineated: his quest for power, the moral cost be damned; his obsession with Jawaharlal Nehru and his descendants, Indira and Rajiv Gandhi; his contradictions and paradoxes, namely his allegiance to his parent organisation, the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), and also his stoking "Hindu nationalism trying to operate within the constraints of democracy".

We are shown how Vajpayee contributed to his image as a "good man in bad company", the bad company being the Sangh Parivar in the few decades following the murder of Gandhiji; and how Vajpayee was the "friend to all, enemy to none", a bridge builder indispensable in BJP's coalition era. We are presented a psychological and social map of his conflicts, internal and external, at being described as a mukhauta or mask of a "moderate" for the Sangh. It's an insightful account of his internal struggles, which evidently were monumental.

As a person, Vajpayee comes across as unconventional to say the least. Vajpayee said, "I am a bachelor, not a brahmachari." What's more, if you think you've consumed all the writing and movies there are about love triangles, wait till you learn here about Vajpayee's domestic arrangement. No spoilers, but imagine the torments that afflicted Vajpayee's parent organisation, the RSS, as it came to terms with him. We are also told of his love of good food in general and specifically meat and alcohol, convivial company, and the public stage. The author explains all this as the traits of a bon vivant and a bohemian. Along the way, we get insights into Vajpayee's relationships with mentors and colleagues in the RSS, and colleagues in the BJP, including L K Advani, Modi and others. We are provided brief portraits of these leaders as well.

ATAL BIHARI VAJPAYEE
Author: Sagarika Ghose
Publisher: Juggernaut
Pages: 432 Price: ₹799

The book tells us so much, but misses a crucial detail. I am reminded of Amit Shah's announcement in 2019 that the National Register of Citizens would be compiled. The NRC was enabled in 2003 by an Act of a BJP government under Vajpayee with the consent of the opposition, chiefly the Congress party.

The Vajpayee administration added Section 14A to the Citizenship Act that empowered the government to issue a "national identity card" registering "every citizen of India", and to "maintain a National Register of Indian Citizens". Surely Vajpayee had fathomed the implications? And the Vajpayee-Advani-led government apparently framed rules for drawing up local registers of citizens that, among other things, allowed people to complain that their neighbours were illegal migrants, at which point the accused would be presumed guilty of the alleged offence and have to prove their citizenship. This vision of a society in which people suspect each other has RSS or other Sangh outfits written all over it; Vajpayee probably accommodated them. Yet the 2003 amendment does not find a mention in the book. In an otherwise splendidly wrought book, this is a major flaw; this episode might have forced a radical and more scathing reappraisal of Vajpayee, which might have led the author to a different book.

BRUNCH WITH BS ▸ KIDAMBI SRIKANTH BADMINTON PLAYER

Stoic shuttler

The first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships, Srikanth has seen dizzying heights and deep lows. He chooses to be unperturbed by the ebb and flow of life, writes Vaibhav Raghunandan

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

"It's weird, no?" the face at the other end of the screen says. "It's strange to do this looking into a device." And it is. More so, considering the last time Kidambi Srikanth and I sat down for an interview, it was across from each other, in person, in a hotel room in Delhi. This was late 2017, when Srikanth became only the fourth person in badminton history to win four BWF Super Series titles in one year — a feat that is as rare as it is difficult. A few months on, he went on to become the World No 1 — another first for a male Indian shuttler. It seems a lifetime away but Srikanth remembers — the interview itself vaguely, the phenomenal year fondly.

Since then there has been a churn. During that supremely taxing and profitable season, Srikanth suffered what became a series of unfortunate injuries, a loss of form when in recovery, and a subsequent slide in the rankings, all of which meant from being a shoo-in contender for a medal, he soon became a player desperate to get the ranking points to qualify for the Olympics last year. And he may well have, despite all of it, if it hadn't been for Covid-19. The pandemic meant multiple tournaments were cancelled, leaving him with very few to perform well in to get the points required. Despite all the records and the firsts achieved in the Olympic cycle, he ended up missing out on the Tokyo Olympics itself.

It is late morning, and we are banding together for brunch. Me: at home in Giridih, Jharkhand, with oats, fruits and coffee. He: in his room in Hyderabad, avoiding eating at this random hour (it's around 10 am) because he's on a strict schedule. Nonetheless, he casually sips on a glass of milk.

This nonchalance isn't put on; it is all for real. Kidambi Srikanth refuses to get emotionally drawn out. In 2017, when on a roll, he refused to celebrate his achievements too hard. And, in the aftermath, he has refused to drown in misery. "It was tough missing out on the Olympics, of course," Srikanth says. "But I've learnt to not dwell on things that have passed." Those close to him, his brother K Nandagopal and his childhood friends came together, expecting him to turn inward, but he didn't. Post-Tokyo, as the badminton season put itself back together, Srikanth played tournaments regularly, hoping that he'd be in good form leading into the World Championships — and then almost didn't get there, unable to secure a visa till three days before the event began.

"That's one lesson I think I have learnt. And maybe this pandemic has enhanced it. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should. I just wanted to play... take it one match at a time," says the 29-year-old, smiling gently. The choice of words is deliberate. It's athlete trope but here it means more. When expectations fizzle out, what happens to desire? It seemed less a question of sports than a zen koan: What is the sound of one hand clapping?

In Srikanth's case, this is perhaps his best being. When he thinks less, he does more. And after all the lows , there have been highs.

In December 2021, he went to Spain expecting nothing, only to become the first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships. And then, from that high, again the unexpected. He was back in Hyderabad not out of choice, forced to pull out of the India Open (a tournament he loves playing) having tested positive for Covid-19, and then pulling out of the Syed Modi International to give himself time to recover. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should.

And what you can, are the basics. Train, eat, recover and repeat. Athletes are incredibly nit-picky about their routines, especially when it comes to their diets. Their bodies, after all, aren't just vessels of consciousness but, quite literally, vehicles of gain — but even among them, India's badminton specialists are a step apart. I'd met P V Sindhu when she was a teenager, fresh off winning her first World Championship bronze, and at the time, she'd professed a love for ice-cream and in the same breath admitted she hadn't eaten one in months. She sat across the table, watching me gorge on Hyderabadi biryani for well over an hour. If she was tortured, she didn't show it.

Srikanth is a bit different. "I don't have a favourite food... I like home-cooked food, I guess," he says. His breakfast (home-cooked dosa and chutney) is eaten before he goes for early morning training, and he almost entirely follows through on home-cooked food when not in competition. When in competition, things change, though not drastically.

"To be honest, this bio bubble, being stuck in hotel rooms, doesn't bother me much," he says. What he admittedly does miss is going out to eat in different cities he plays at across the globe. And while his taste in food itself varies very little, it allows him to take in and absorb cultures.

But all things are relative. Discomfort most. Srikanth, while a world-class athlete, is also deeply connected to his roots in Guntur (Andhra Pradesh) and is aware of the devastation the pandemic has wreaked on small communities. "I'm lucky to get to do what I do," he says softly. "If ever I doubt the cards I've been dealt, all I have to do is think about everyone else who doesn't have this."

This is an often overlooked privilege of Indian sport. Many athletes have recently admitted to realising it. Despite the often haphazard and somewhat underfunded grassroots apparatus, infrastructure and facilities have survived. Sponsorships and funding have not dried up entirely.

Even when things are falling around you and unpredictability reigns, you know that your training facilities are still around waiting for you to return.

"It's one of the benefits of the centre (Pullela Gopichand's badminton academy that serves as a training base for almost all of India's top shuttlers) that it's available to us all the time," Srikanth says. "We know that very few people will go there, and those that do are colleagues and teammates... so we are safe." Another long sip of the milk follows.

Withdrawal from the two big home badminton events means that Indian badminton's reluctant prince has yet to be serenaded properly. But for the man who played without expectations and refuses to get drowned by others', this latest rise is narrative flow. Up and down and up again. For now, he's happy to take it as it goes.

"It is good to plan," he says, "but it is important to take things as they go. Everything else will follow." That is the sound of one hand clapping.

City of bangle makers looks for change

As Firozabad goes to polls on Sunday, glass workers seek better conditions, higher wages and health care

"I will vote for change." That is what Mohammad Shafeeq, a bangle maker of Firozabad, says he will do on Sunday when the third phase of polling is held in Uttar Pradesh.

What may sound as an oft-cited, cliched expression is anchored in urgent, immediate concerns.

Asked what change means to him, the 22-year-old first-time voter says: "Good working conditions, medical facilities and better wages."

Not just Shafeeq, but many others working at the unit where he's employed, Kohinoor Bangle Industries, will vote for the same cause.

The district of Firozabad, known as the glassmaking hub of India, employs over 20,000 workers in its 7,874 registered industrial units, according to the state government's Department of MSME and Export Promotion website. A majority of these units are bangle manufacturing factories, which produce over 80 per cent of all utility glass products for India's domestic market.

For workers engaged in glass manufacturing, besides low wages and lack of healthcare facilities, closure of factories in the region is one of the major reasons for worry.

"Over 100 factories have closed operations in the past four years, leaving thousands without livelihood. People are ready to work here at 1,400 Celsius degrees (roughly the temperature at which glass gets moulded) for just ₹200 a day," says Shankar Singh, 45, a factory worker.

Citing the health hazards resulting from it, he adds, "Everyone has to die one day. But we are dying every day, inhaling toxic fumes while our hands pick and mould gleaming bangles."

ELECTION WATCH 2022

According to insiders, about 90 per cent of the district's working population is directly or indirectly linked to the bangle industry. Whenever a factory shuts operation, the cost of labour decreases. The rising cost of raw materials and labour, and lack of aid from the government result in factory owners exploiting workers by paying them low wages, they add.

The Covid-19 lockdown and the economic slowdown that followed worsened the conditions for workers.

Irfan Khan, 21, a second-generation worker who lost his father to tuberculosis, says his wages have not increased in the past five years. "Every day is a struggle for survival. If there are more workers looking for employment, on a rare day one might agree to work for ₹100, which I used to get when I started in 2014.

"We are working for 8-10 hours daily with chemicals and toxic gases, but get no medical attention. I fear meeting a similar fate as my father," he says.

The combination of chemicals, heat and glass poses serious health risks for workers. "Most people die of tuberculosis or other fatal infections of the lungs and chest due to the toxic gases," says Chandar Pal, a local doctor.

For women workers, the situation is only worse.

Marzina, a 42-year-old widow, works with 600 men in a factory. She gets paid 30-40 per cent less than her male colleagues, just enough for herself and her three children to live with dignity. "I don't get a widow pension. The government only gives food. I work to give my children better education and life so they don't end up working here," she says.

Asked why factories are shutting operations in UP, Khalid Naseer, the owner of Kohinoor Bangle industries, says that in the past five years the price of natural gas has almost doubled from ₹17 per standard cubic metre. Also, up to 18 per cent goods and services tax on raw materials and the increase in labour cost is breaking the back of this industry, he says.

"The day is not far when glass bangles will only be relics if the government continues to turn a blind eye to this industry. People are closing factories because workers protest demanding high wages, but if we increase product cost buyers protest."

In 2018, the UP government launched the One District One Product (ODOP) scheme to support various stakeholders on financial, technical and managerial fronts. Factory owners say the government brought in ODOP to promote local industries, but add its execution hasn't been as promising.

Alleging that the ODOP scheme in Firozabad has been a failure , former CM and Samajwadi Party chief Akhilesh Yadav recently promised a new glass city in the district if his party formed the government after the Assembly election. "If a new glass hub is required for the development of the state, we will build a new glass industry," Yadav had said.

But until the glass city gets a revamp or aid for its glassware industries, Firozabad with its population of approximately two million will be a shadow of its past.

The many faces of Vajpayee

A biography of India's first non-Congress PM to serve a full term offers an insightful and engrossing narrative

SUHIT KELKAR

In recent years, we have been seeing a number of high-profile releases of biographies of politicians associated with the Sangh Parivar. These books seem to stake their subject's claim to uncle-of-the-nationhood, as if to offer Sanghi alternatives to the Gandhi-Nehrus. In so doing, it's not that facts are always massaged; more usually, calamitous actions are made palatable through generous and glowing interpretations of motives or contexts. The idea, I suppose, is to write an Indian historical narrative that is, if not entirely Congress-mukt, at least one in which Congress figures are diminished and Sanghi characters inflated.

It is in this climate that journalist and novelist Sagarika Ghose has written Atal Bihari Vajpayee, a biography. Straight off, she tells us she is a liberal. The idea of a liberal assessing the life of right-winger Atal Bihari Vajpayee, the first non-Congressman to serve a full term as prime minister of India, raises our expectations of getting a book that inclines not towards PR but critique. In this, the book succeeds, and has many crucial insights delivered in an engrossing narrative — but with one flaw too massive to overlook.

The book shows Vajpayee's rise as a charismatic youth politician of the Sangh to Parliamentarian and finally India's prime minister, a trajectory that also brought Hindu right-wing politics to mainstream respectability, and turned the party he co-founded, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), into a serious contender on Raisina Hill. His most high-profile achievements and failures one expects to read are present in vivid colour — his soaring career taking the BJP to success, his dogged and determined tenure as an opposition politician, his ascent to the premiership, his unprecedented attempts at peace with Pakistan; also, his opportunistically riding the Ram Mandir movement and directly abetting the rath yatra (and, therefore, indirectly the Babri demolition that devastated communal relations). Also, his fiasco of a 13-day government, his inept handling of national security issues right from the hijack of Indian Airlines' IC814 to the damp squib called Operation Parakram, to his swaying readily with the breeze that boosted Narendra Modi after the Gujarat riots. There is plenty here to chew on and relish for avid fans of political nonfiction.

The writing is beautifully wrought, displaying a novelist's aptitude for making a phrase ring and an image lambent. For instance, the passage describing the demolition of the Babri Masjid is among the most visual and well-voiced I've read in years, and there are many such feats of writing.

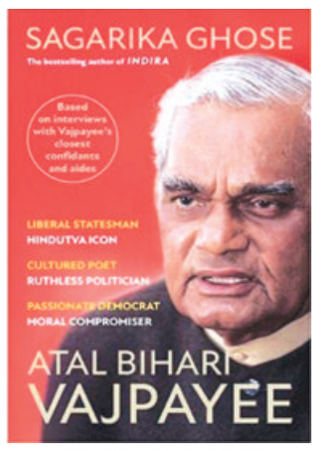

Along with the big picture, the author zooms in on the individual, points out his missteps and deviousness, doublespeak and opportunism, in detail and in refreshingly frank terms. The author's aim, we realise, is to see through the persona of the poet-politician down to the chameleonic person. Vajpayee the politician, we are told, was "(o)ne day a moderate, the next day sounding like a hardliner, one day arguing for pluralism, the next day harking to Hindu sentiments". At another place, we see this: "All through his life, Vajpayee... showed he lacked the strength of character to act against wrong, but still had the sensitivity to be ashamed about his own failings".

BOOKS & IDEAS

Vajpayee's motivations are incisively delineated: his quest for power, the moral cost be damned; his obsession with Jawaharlal Nehru and his descendants, Indira and Rajiv Gandhi; his contradictions and paradoxes, namely his allegiance to his parent organisation, the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), and also his stoking "Hindu nationalism trying to operate within the constraints of democracy".

We are shown how Vajpayee contributed to his image as a "good man in bad company", the bad company being the Sangh Parivar in the few decades following the murder of Gandhiji; and how Vajpayee was the "friend to all, enemy to none", a bridge builder indispensable in BJP's coalition era. We are presented a psychological and social map of his conflicts, internal and external, at being described as a mukhauta or mask of a "moderate" for the Sangh. It's an insightful account of his internal struggles, which evidently were monumental.

As a person, Vajpayee comes across as unconventional to say the least. Vajpayee said, "I am a bachelor, not a brahmachari." What's more, if you think you've consumed all the writing and movies there are about love triangles, wait till you learn here about Vajpayee's domestic arrangement. No spoilers, but imagine the torments that afflicted Vajpayee's parent organisation, the RSS, as it came to terms with him. We are also told of his love of good food in general and specifically meat and alcohol, convivial company, and the public stage. The author explains all this as the traits of a bon vivant and a bohemian. Along the way, we get insights into Vajpayee's relationships with mentors and colleagues in the RSS, and colleagues in the BJP, including L K Advani, Modi and others. We are provided brief portraits of these leaders as well.

The book tells us so much, but misses a crucial detail. I am reminded of Amit Shah's announcement in 2019 that the National Register of Citizens would be compiled. The NRC was enabled in 2003 by an Act of a BJP government under Vajpayee with the consent of the opposition, chiefly the Congress party.

The Vajpayee administration added Section 14A to the Citizenship Act that empowered the government to issue a "national identity card" registering "every citizen of India", and to "maintain a National Register of Indian Citizens". Surely Vajpayee had fathomed the implications? And the Vajpayee-Advani-led government apparently framed rules for drawing up local registers of citizens that, among other things, allowed people to complain that their neighbours were illegal migrants, at which point the accused would be presumed guilty of the alleged offence and have to prove their citizenship. This vision of a society in which people suspect each other has RSS or other Sangh outfits written all over it; Vajpayee probably accommodated them. Yet the 2003 amendment does not find a mention in the book. In an otherwise splendidly wrought book, this is a major flaw; this episode might have forced a radical and more scathing reappraisal of Vajpayee, which might have led the author to a different book.

BRUNCH WITH BS ▸ KIDAMBI SRIKANTH BADMINTON PLAYER

Stoic shuttler

The first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships, Srikanth has seen dizzying heights and deep lows. He chooses to be unperturbed by the ebb and flow of life, writes Vaibhav Raghunandan

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

"It's weird, no?" the face at the other end of the screen says. "It's strange to do this looking into a device." And it is. More so, considering the last time Kidambi Srikanth and I sat down for an interview, it was across from each other, in person, in a hotel room in Delhi. This was late 2017, when Srikanth became only the fourth person in badminton history to win four BWF Super Series titles in one year — a feat that is as rare as it is difficult. A few months on, he went on to become the World No 1 — another first for a male Indian shuttler. It seems a lifetime away but Srikanth remembers — the interview itself vaguely, the phenomenal year fondly.

Since then there has been a churn. During that supremely taxing and profitable season, Srikanth suffered what became a series of unfortunate injuries, a loss of form when in recovery, and a subsequent slide in the rankings, all of which meant from being a shoo-in contender for a medal, he soon became a player desperate to get the ranking points to qualify for the Olympics last year. And he may well have, despite all of it, if it hadn't been for Covid-19. The pandemic meant multiple tournaments were cancelled, leaving him with very few to perform well in to get the points required. Despite all the records and the firsts achieved in the Olympic cycle, he ended up missing out on the Tokyo Olympics itself.

It is late morning, and we are banding together for brunch. Me: at home in Giridih, Jharkhand, with oats, fruits and coffee. He: in his room in Hyderabad, avoiding eating at this random hour (it's around 10 am) because he's on a strict schedule. Nonetheless, he casually sips on a glass of milk.

This nonchalance isn't put on; it is all for real. Kidambi Srikanth refuses to get emotionally drawn out. In 2017, when on a roll, he refused to celebrate his achievements too hard. And, in the aftermath, he has refused to drown in misery. "It was tough missing out on the Olympics, of course," Srikanth says. "But I've learnt to not dwell on things that have passed." Those close to him, his brother K Nandagopal and his childhood friends came together, expecting him to turn inward, but he didn't. Post-Tokyo, as the badminton season put itself back together, Srikanth played tournaments regularly, hoping that he'd be in good form leading into the World Championships — and then almost didn't get there, unable to secure a visa till three days before the event began.

"That's one lesson I think I have learnt. And maybe this pandemic has enhanced it. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should. I just wanted to play... take it one match at a time," says the 29-year-old, smiling gently. The choice of words is deliberate. It's athlete trope but here it means more. When expectations fizzle out, what happens to desire? It seemed less a question of sports than a zen koan: What is the sound of one hand clapping?

In Srikanth's case, this is perhaps his best being. When he thinks less, he does more. And after all the lows , there have been highs.

In December 2021, he went to Spain expecting nothing, only to become the first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships. And then, from that high, again the unexpected. He was back in Hyderabad not out of choice, forced to pull out of the India Open (a tournament he loves playing) having tested positive for Covid-19, and then pulling out of the Syed Modi International to give himself time to recover. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should.

And what you can, are the basics. Train, eat, recover and repeat. Athletes are incredibly nit-picky about their routines, especially when it comes to their diets. Their bodies, after all, aren't just vessels of consciousness but, quite literally, vehicles of gain — but even among them, India's badminton specialists are a step apart. I'd met P V Sindhu when she was a teenager, fresh off winning her first World Championship bronze, and at the time, she'd professed a love for ice-cream and in the same breath admitted she hadn't eaten one in months. She sat across the table, watching me gorge on Hyderabadi biryani for well over an hour. If she was tortured, she didn't show it.

Srikanth is a bit different. "I don't have a favourite food... I like home-cooked food, I guess," he says. His breakfast (home-cooked dosa and chutney) is eaten before he goes for early morning training, and he almost entirely follows through on home-cooked food when not in competition. When in competition, things change, though not drastically.

"To be honest, this bio bubble, being stuck in hotel rooms, doesn't bother me much," he says. What he admittedly does miss is going out to eat in different cities he plays at across the globe. And while his taste in food itself varies very little, it allows him to take in and absorb cultures.

But all things are relative. Discomfort most. Srikanth, while a world-class athlete, is also deeply connected to his roots in Guntur (Andhra Pradesh) and is aware of the devastation the pandemic has wreaked on small communities. "I'm lucky to get to do what I do," he says softly. "If ever I doubt the cards I've been dealt, all I have to do is think about everyone else who doesn't have this."

This is an often overlooked privilege of Indian sport. Many athletes have recently admitted to realising it. Despite the often haphazard and somewhat underfunded grassroots apparatus, infrastructure and facilities have survived. Sponsorships and funding have not dried up entirely.

Even when things are falling around you and unpredictability reigns, you know that your training facilities are still around waiting for you to return.

"It's one of the benefits of the centre (Pullela Gopichand's badminton academy that serves as a training base for almost all of India's top shuttlers) that it's available to us all the time," Srikanth says. "We know that very few people will go there, and those that do are colleagues and teammates... so we are safe." Another long sip of the milk follows.

Withdrawal from the two big home badminton events means that Indian badminton's reluctant prince has yet to be serenaded properly. But for the man who played without expectations and refuses to get drowned by others', this latest rise is narrative flow. Up and down and up again. For now, he's happy to take it as it goes.

"It is good to plan," he says, "but it is important to take things as they go. Everything else will follow." That is the sound of one hand clapping.

City of bangle makers looks for change

As Firozabad goes to polls on Sunday, glass workers seek better conditions, higher wages and health care

Firozabad, 18 February

"I will vote for change." That is what Mohammad Shafeeq, a bangle maker of Firozabad, says he will do on Sunday when the third phase of polling is held in Uttar Pradesh.

What may sound as an oft-cited, cliched expression is anchored in urgent, immediate concerns.

Asked what change means to him, the 22-year-old first-time voter says: "Good working conditions, medical facilities and better wages."

Not just Shafeeq, but many others working at the unit where he's employed, Kohinoor Bangle Industries, will vote for the same cause.

The district of Firozabad, known as the glassmaking hub of India, employs over 20,000 workers in its 7,874 registered industrial units, according to the state government's Department of MSME and Export Promotion website. A majority of these units are bangle manufacturing factories, which produce over 80 per cent of all utility glass products for India's domestic market.

For workers engaged in glass manufacturing, besides low wages and lack of healthcare facilities, closure of factories in the region is one of the major reasons for worry.

"Over 100 factories have closed operations in the past four years, leaving thousands without livelihood. People are ready to work here at 1,400 Celsius degrees (roughly the temperature at which glass gets moulded) for just ₹200 a day," says Shankar Singh, 45, a factory worker.

Citing the health hazards resulting from it, he adds, "Everyone has to die one day. But we are dying every day, inhaling toxic fumes while our hands pick and mould gleaming bangles."

ELECTION WATCH 2022

According to insiders, about 90 per cent of the district's working population is directly or indirectly linked to the bangle industry. Whenever a factory shuts operation, the cost of labour decreases. The rising cost of raw materials and labour, and lack of aid from the government result in factory owners exploiting workers by paying them low wages, they add.

The Covid-19 lockdown and the economic slowdown that followed worsened the conditions for workers.

Irfan Khan, 21, a second-generation worker who lost his father to tuberculosis, says his wages have not increased in the past five years. "Every day is a struggle for survival. If there are more workers looking for employment, on a rare day one might agree to work for ₹100, which I used to get when I started in 2014.

"We are working for 8-10 hours daily with chemicals and toxic gases, but get no medical attention. I fear meeting a similar fate as my father," he says.

The combination of chemicals, heat and glass poses serious health risks for workers. "Most people die of tuberculosis or other fatal infections of the lungs and chest due to the toxic gases," says Chandar Pal, a local doctor.

For women workers, the situation is only worse.

Marzina, a 42-year-old widow, works with 600 men in a factory. She gets paid 30-40 per cent less than her male colleagues, just enough for herself and her three children to live with dignity. "I don't get a widow pension. The government only gives food. I work to give my children better education and life so they don't end up working here," she says.

Asked why factories are shutting operations in UP, Khalid Naseer, the owner of Kohinoor Bangle industries, says that in the past five years the price of natural gas has almost doubled from ₹17 per standard cubic metre. Also, up to 18 per cent goods and services tax on raw materials and the increase in labour cost is breaking the back of this industry, he says.

"The day is not far when glass bangles will only be relics if the government continues to turn a blind eye to this industry. People are closing factories because workers protest demanding high wages, but if we increase product cost buyers protest."

In 2018, the UP government launched the One District One Product (ODOP) scheme to support various stakeholders on financial, technical and managerial fronts. Factory owners say the government brought in ODOP to promote local industries, but add its execution hasn't been as promising.

Alleging that the ODOP scheme in Firozabad has been a failure , former CM and Samajwadi Party chief Akhilesh Yadav recently promised a new glass city in the district if his party formed the government after the Assembly election. "If a new glass hub is required for the development of the state, we will build a new glass industry," Yadav had said.

But until the glass city gets a revamp or aid for its glassware industries, Firozabad with its population of approximately two million will be a shadow of its past.

The many faces of Vajpayee

A biography of India's first non-Congress PM to serve a full term offers an insightful and engrossing narrative

SUHIT KELKAR

In recent years, we have been seeing a number of high-profile releases of biographies of politicians associated with the Sangh Parivar. These books seem to stake their subject's claim to uncle-of-the-nationhood, as if to offer Sanghi alternatives to the Gandhi-Nehrus. In so doing, it's not that facts are always massaged; more usually, calamitous actions are made palatable through generous and glowing interpretations of motives or contexts. The idea, I suppose, is to write an Indian historical narrative that is, if not entirely Congress-mukt, at least one in which Congress figures are diminished and Sanghi characters inflated.

It is in this climate that journalist and novelist Sagarika Ghose has written Atal Bihari Vajpayee, a biography. Straight off, she tells us she is a liberal. The idea of a liberal assessing the life of right-winger Atal Bihari Vajpayee, the first non-Congressman to serve a full term as prime minister of India, raises our expectations of getting a book that inclines not towards PR but critique. In this, the book succeeds, and has many crucial insights delivered in an engrossing narrative — but with one flaw too massive to overlook.

The book shows Vajpayee's rise as a charismatic youth politician of the Sangh to Parliamentarian and finally India's prime minister, a trajectory that also brought Hindu right-wing politics to mainstream respectability, and turned the party he co-founded, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), into a serious contender on Raisina Hill. His most high-profile achievements and failures one expects to read are present in vivid colour — his soaring career taking the BJP to success, his dogged and determined tenure as an opposition politician, his ascent to the premiership, his unprecedented attempts at peace with Pakistan; also, his opportunistically riding the Ram Mandir movement and directly abetting the rath yatra (and, therefore, indirectly the Babri demolition that devastated communal relations). Also, his fiasco of a 13-day government, his inept handling of national security issues right from the hijack of Indian Airlines' IC814 to the damp squib called Operation Parakram, to his swaying readily with the breeze that boosted Narendra Modi after the Gujarat riots. There is plenty here to chew on and relish for avid fans of political nonfiction.

BOOKS & IDEAS

The writing is beautifully wrought, displaying a novelist's aptitude for making a phrase ring and an image lambent. For instance, the passage describing the demolition of the Babri Masjid is among the most visual and well-voiced I've read in years, and there are many such feats of writing.

Along with the big picture, the author zooms in on the individual, points out his missteps and deviousness, doublespeak and opportunism, in detail and in refreshingly frank terms. The author's aim, we realise, is to see through the persona of the poet-politician down to the chameleonic person. Vajpayee the politician, we are told, was "(o)ne day a moderate, the next day sounding like a hardliner, one day arguing for pluralism, the next day harking to Hindu sentiments". At another place, we see this: "All through his life, Vajpayee... showed he lacked the strength of character to act against wrong, but still had the sensitivity to be ashamed about his own failings".

ATAL BIHARI VAJPAYEE
Author: Sagarika Ghose
Publisher: Juggernaut
Pages: 432 Price: ₹799

Vajpayee's motivations are incisively delineated: his quest for power, the moral cost be damned; his obsession with Jawaharlal Nehru and his descendants, Indira and Rajiv Gandhi; his contradictions and paradoxes, namely his allegiance to his parent organisation, the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), and also his stoking "Hindu nationalism trying to operate within the constraints of democracy".

We are shown how Vajpayee contributed to his image as a "good man in bad company", the bad company being the Sangh Parivar in the few decades following the murder of Gandhiji; and how Vajpayee was the "friend to all, enemy to none", a bridge builder indispensable in BJP's coalition era. We are presented a psychological and social map of his conflicts, internal and external, at being described as a mukhauta or mask of a "moderate" for the Sangh. It's an insightful account of his internal struggles, which evidently were monumental.

As a person, Vajpayee comes across as unconventional to say the least. Vajpayee said, "I am a bachelor, not a brahmachari." What's more, if you think you've consumed all the writing and movies there are about love triangles, wait till you learn here about Vajpayee's domestic arrangement. No spoilers, but imagine the torments that afflicted Vajpayee's parent organisation, the RSS, as it came to terms with him. We are also told of his love of good food in general and specifically meat and alcohol, convivial company, and the public stage. The author explains all this as the traits of a bon vivant and a bohemian. Along the way, we get insights into Vajpayee's relationships with mentors and colleagues in the RSS, and colleagues in the BJP, including L K Advani, Modi and others. We are provided brief portraits of these leaders as well.

The book tells us so much, but misses a crucial detail. I am reminded of Amit Shah's announcement in 2019 that the National Register of Citizens would be compiled. The NRC was enabled in 2003 by an Act of a BJP government under Vajpayee with the consent of the opposition, chiefly the Congress party.

The Vajpayee administration added Section 14A to the Citizenship Act that empowered the government to issue a "national identity card" registering "every citizen of India", and to "maintain a National Register of Indian Citizens". Surely Vajpayee had fathomed the implications? And the Vajpayee-Advani-led government apparently framed rules for drawing up local registers of citizens that, among other things, allowed people to complain that their neighbours were illegal migrants, at which point the accused would be presumed guilty of the alleged offence and have to prove their citizenship. This vision of a society in which people suspect each other has RSS or other Sangh outfits written all over it; Vajpayee probably accommodated them. Yet the 2003 amendment does not find a mention in the book. In an otherwise splendidly wrought book, this is a major flaw; this episode might have forced a radical and more scathing reappraisal of Vajpayee, which might have led the author to a different book.

BRUNCH WITH BS ▸ KIDAMBI SRIKANTH BADMINTON PLAYER

Stoic shuttler

The first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships, Srikanth has seen dizzying heights and deep lows. He chooses to be unperturbed by the ebb and flow of life, writes Vaibhav Raghunandan

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

"It's weird, no?" the face at the other end of the screen says. "It's strange to do this looking into a device." And it is. More so, considering the last time Kidambi Srikanth and I sat down for an interview, it was across from each other, in person, in a hotel room in Delhi. This was late 2017, when Srikanth became only the fourth person in badminton history to win four BWF Super Series titles in one year — a feat that is as rare as it is difficult. A few months on, he went on to become the World No 1 — another first for a male Indian shuttler. It seems a lifetime away but Srikanth remembers — the interview itself vaguely, the phenomenal year fondly.

Since then there has been a churn. During that supremely taxing and profitable season, Srikanth suffered what became a series of unfortunate injuries, a loss of form when in recovery, and a subsequent slide in the rankings, all of which meant from being a shoo-in contender for a medal, he soon became a player desperate to get the ranking points to qualify for the Olympics last year. And he may well have, despite all of it, if it hadn't been for Covid-19. The pandemic meant multiple tournaments were cancelled, leaving him with very few to perform well in to get the points required. Despite all the records and the firsts achieved in the Olympic cycle, he ended up missing out on the Tokyo Olympics itself.

It is late morning, and we are banding together for brunch. Me: at home in Giridih, Jharkhand, with oats, fruits and coffee. He: in his room in Hyderabad, avoiding eating at this random hour (it's around 10 am) because he's on a strict schedule. Nonetheless, he casually sips on a glass of milk.

This nonchalance isn't put on; it is all for real. Kidambi Srikanth refuses to get emotionally drawn out. In 2017, when on a roll, he refused to celebrate his achievements too hard. And, in the aftermath, he has refused to drown in misery. "It was tough missing out on the Olympics, of course," Srikanth says. "But I've learnt to not dwell on things that have passed." Those close to him, his brother K Nandagopal and his childhood friends came together, expecting him to turn inward, but he didn't. Post-Tokyo, as the badminton season put itself back together, Srikanth played tournaments regularly, hoping that he'd be in good form leading into the World Championships — and then almost didn't get there, unable to secure a visa till three days before the event began.

"That's one lesson I think I have learnt. And maybe this pandemic has enhanced it. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should. I just wanted to play... take it one match at a time," says the 29-year-old, smiling gently. The choice of words is deliberate. It's athlete trope but here it means more. When expectations fizzle out, what happens to desire? It seemed less a question of sports than a zen koan: What is the sound of one hand clapping?

In Srikanth's case, this is perhaps his best being. When he thinks less, he does more. And after all the lows , there have been highs.

In December 2021, he went to Spain expecting nothing, only to become the first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships. And then, from that high, again the unexpected. He was back in Hyderabad not out of choice, forced to pull out of the India Open (a tournament he loves playing) having tested positive for Covid-19, and then pulling out of the Syed Modi International to give himself time to recover. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should.

And what you can, are the basics. Train, eat, recover and repeat. Athletes are incredibly nit-picky about their routines, especially when it comes to their diets. Their bodies, after all, aren't just vessels of consciousness but, quite literally, vehicles of gain — but even among them, India's badminton specialists are a step apart. I'd met P V Sindhu when she was a teenager, fresh off winning her first World Championship bronze, and at the time, she'd professed a love for ice-cream and in the same breath admitted she hadn't eaten one in months. She sat across the table, watching me gorge on Hyderabadi biryani for well over an hour. If she was tortured, she didn't show it.

Srikanth is a bit different. "I don't have a favourite food... I like home-cooked food, I guess," he says. His breakfast (home-cooked dosa and chutney) is eaten before he goes for early morning training, and he almost entirely follows through on home-cooked food when not in competition. When in competition, things change, though not drastically.

"To be honest, this bio bubble, being stuck in hotel rooms, doesn't bother me much," he says. What he admittedly does miss is going out to eat in different cities he plays at across the globe. And while his taste in food itself varies very little, it allows him to take in and absorb cultures.

But all things are relative. Discomfort most. Srikanth, while a world-class athlete, is also deeply connected to his roots in Guntur (Andhra Pradesh) and is aware of the devastation the pandemic has wreaked on small communities. "I'm lucky to get to do what I do," he says softly. "If ever I doubt the cards I've been dealt, all I have to do is think about everyone else who doesn't have this."

This is an often overlooked privilege of Indian sport. Many athletes have recently admitted to realising it. Despite the often haphazard and somewhat underfunded grassroots apparatus, infrastructure and facilities have survived. Sponsorships and funding have not dried up entirely.

Even when things are falling around you and unpredictability reigns, you know that your training facilities are still around waiting for you to return.

"It's one of the benefits of the centre (Pullela Gopichand's badminton academy that serves as a training base for almost all of India's top shuttlers) that it's available to us all the time," Srikanth says. "We know that very few people will go there, and those that do are colleagues and teammates... so we are safe." Another long sip of the milk follows.

Withdrawal from the two big home badminton events means that Indian badminton's reluctant prince has yet to be serenaded properly. But for the man who played without expectations and refuses to get drowned by others', this latest rise is narrative flow. Up and down and up again. For now, he's happy to take it as it goes.

"It is good to plan," he says, "but it is important to take things as they go. Everything else will follow." That is the sound of one hand clapping.

City of bangle makers looks for change

As Firozabad goes to polls on Sunday, glass workers seek better conditions, higher wages and health care

Firozabad, 18 February

"I will vote for change." That is what Mohammad Shafeeq, a bangle maker of Firozabad, says he will do on Sunday when the third phase of polling is held in Uttar Pradesh.

What may sound as an oft-cited, cliched expression is anchored in urgent, immediate concerns.

Asked what change means to him, the 22-year-old first-time voter says: "Good working conditions, medical facilities and better wages."

Not just Shafeeq, but many others working at the unit where he's employed, Kohinoor Bangle Industries, will vote for the same cause.

The district of Firozabad, known as the glassmaking hub of India, employs over 20,000 workers in its 7,874 registered industrial units, according to the state government's Department of MSME and Export Promotion website. A majority of these units are bangle manufacturing factories, which produce over 80 per cent of all utility glass products for India's domestic market.

For workers engaged in glass manufacturing, besides low wages and lack of healthcare facilities, closure of factories in the region is one of the major reasons for worry.

"Over 100 factories have closed operations in the past four years, leaving thousands without livelihood. People are ready to work here at 1,400 Celsius degrees (roughly the temperature at which glass gets moulded) for just ₹200 a day," says Shankar Singh, 45, a factory worker.

Citing the health hazards resulting from it, he adds, "Everyone has to die one day. But we are dying every day, inhaling toxic fumes while our hands pick and mould gleaming bangles."

ELECTION WATCH 2022

According to insiders, about 90 per cent of the district's working population is directly or indirectly linked to the bangle industry. Whenever a factory shuts operation, the cost of labour decreases. The rising cost of raw materials and labour, and lack of aid from the government result in factory owners exploiting workers by paying them low wages, they add.

The Covid-19 lockdown and the economic slowdown that followed worsened the conditions for workers.

Irfan Khan, 21, a second-generation worker who lost his father to tuberculosis, says his wages have not increased in the past five years. "Every day is a struggle for survival. If there are more workers looking for employment, on a rare day one might agree to work for ₹100, which I used to get when I started in 2014.

"We are working for 8-10 hours daily with chemicals and toxic gases, but get no medical attention. I fear meeting a similar fate as my father," he says.

The combination of chemicals, heat and glass poses serious health risks for workers. "Most people die of tuberculosis or other fatal infections of the lungs and chest due to the toxic gases," says Chandar Pal, a local doctor.

For women workers, the situation is only worse.

Marzina, a 42-year-old widow, works with 600 men in a factory. She gets paid 30-40 per cent less than her male colleagues, just enough for herself and her three children to live with dignity. "I don't get a widow pension. The government only gives food. I work to give my children better education and life so they don't end up working here," she says.

Asked why factories are shutting operations in UP, Khalid Naseer, the owner of Kohinoor Bangle industries, says that in the past five years the price of natural gas has almost doubled from ₹17 per standard cubic metre. Also, up to 18 per cent goods and services tax on raw materials and the increase in labour cost is breaking the back of this industry, he says.

"The day is not far when glass bangles will only be relics if the government continues to turn a blind eye to this industry. People are closing factories because workers protest demanding high wages, but if we increase product cost buyers protest."

In 2018, the UP government launched the One District One Product (ODOP) scheme to support various stakeholders on financial, technical and managerial fronts. Factory owners say the government brought in ODOP to promote local industries, but add its execution hasn't been as promising.

Alleging that the ODOP scheme in Firozabad has been a failure , former CM and Samajwadi Party chief Akhilesh Yadav recently promised a new glass city in the district if his party formed the government after the Assembly election. "If a new glass hub is required for the development of the state, we will build a new glass industry," Yadav had said.

But until the glass city gets a revamp or aid for its glassware industries, Firozabad with its population of approximately two million will be a shadow of its past.

The many faces of Vajpayee

A biography of India's first non-Congress PM to serve a full term offers an insightful and engrossing narrative

SUHIT KELKAR

In recent years, we have been seeing a number of high-profile releases of biographies of politicians associated with the Sangh Parivar. These books seem to stake their subject's claim to uncle-of-the-nationhood, as if to offer Sanghi alternatives to the Gandhi-Nehrus. In so doing, it's not that facts are always massaged; more usually, calamitous actions are made palatable through generous and glowing interpretations of motives or contexts. The idea, I suppose, is to write an Indian historical narrative that is, if not entirely Congress-mukt, at least one in which Congress figures are diminished and Sanghi characters inflated.

It is in this climate that journalist and novelist Sagarika Ghose has written Atal Bihari Vajpayee, a biography. Straight off, she tells us she is a liberal. The idea of a liberal assessing the life of right-winger Atal Bihari Vajpayee, the first non-Congressman to serve a full term as prime minister of India, raises our expectations of getting a book that inclines not towards PR but critique. In this, the book succeeds, and has many crucial insights delivered in an engrossing narrative — but with one flaw too massive to overlook.

The book shows Vajpayee's rise as a charismatic youth politician of the Sangh to Parliamentarian and finally India's prime minister, a trajectory that also brought Hindu right-wing politics to mainstream respectability, and turned the party he co-founded, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), into a serious contender on Raisina Hill. His most high-profile achievements and failures one expects to read are present in vivid colour — his soaring career taking the BJP to success, his dogged and determined tenure as an opposition politician, his ascent to the premiership, his unprecedented attempts at peace with Pakistan; also, his opportunistically riding the Ram Mandir movement and directly abetting the rath yatra (and, therefore, indirectly the Babri demolition that devastated communal relations). Also, his fiasco of a 13-day government, his inept handling of national security issues right from the hijack of Indian Airlines' IC814 to the damp squib called Operation Parakram, to his swaying readily with the breeze that boosted Narendra Modi after the Gujarat riots. There is plenty here to chew on and relish for avid fans of political nonfiction.

The writing is beautifully wrought, displaying a novelist's aptitude for making a phrase ring and an image lambent. For instance, the passage describing the demolition of the Babri Masjid is among the most visual and well-voiced I've read in years, and there are many such feats of writing.

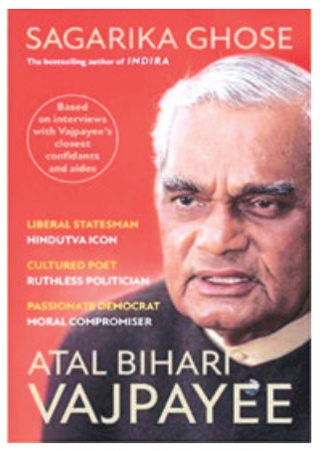

Along with the big picture, the author zooms in on the individual, points out his missteps and deviousness, doublespeak and opportunism, in detail and in refreshingly frank terms. The author's aim, we realise, is to see through the persona of the poet-politician down to the chameleonic person. Vajpayee the politician, we are told, was "(o)ne day a moderate, the next day sounding like a hardliner, one day arguing for pluralism, the next day harking to Hindu sentiments". At another place, we see this: "All through his life, Vajpayee... showed he lacked the strength of character to act against wrong, but still had the sensitivity to be ashamed about his own failings".

BOOKS & IDEAS

Vajpayee's motivations are incisively delineated: his quest for power, the moral cost be damned; his obsession with Jawaharlal Nehru and his descendants, Indira and Rajiv Gandhi; his contradictions and paradoxes, namely his allegiance to his parent organisation, the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), and also his stoking "Hindu nationalism trying to operate within the constraints of democracy".

We are shown how Vajpayee contributed to his image as a "good man in bad company", the bad company being the Sangh Parivar in the few decades following the murder of Gandhiji; and how Vajpayee was the "friend to all, enemy to none", a bridge builder indispensable in BJP's coalition era. We are presented a psychological and social map of his conflicts, internal and external, at being described as a mukhauta or mask of a "moderate" for the Sangh. It's an insightful account of his internal struggles, which evidently were monumental.

As a person, Vajpayee comes across as unconventional to say the least. Vajpayee said, "I am a bachelor, not a brahmachari." What's more, if you think you've consumed all the writing and movies there are about love triangles, wait till you learn here about Vajpayee's domestic arrangement. No spoilers, but imagine the torments that afflicted Vajpayee's parent organisation, the RSS, as it came to terms with him. We are also told of his love of good food in general and specifically meat and alcohol, convivial company, and the public stage. The author explains all this as the traits of a bon vivant and a bohemian. Along the way, we get insights into Vajpayee's relationships with mentors and colleagues in the RSS, and colleagues in the BJP, including L K Advani, Modi and others. We are provided brief portraits of these leaders as well.

The book tells us so much, but misses a crucial detail. I am reminded of Amit Shah's announcement in 2019 that the National Register of Citizens would be compiled. The NRC was enabled in 2003 by an Act of a BJP government under Vajpayee with the consent of the opposition, chiefly the Congress party.

The Vajpayee administration added Section 14A to the Citizenship Act that empowered the government to issue a "national identity card" registering "every citizen of India", and to "maintain a National Register of Indian Citizens". Surely Vajpayee had fathomed the implications? And the Vajpayee-Advani-led government apparently framed rules for drawing up local registers of citizens that, among other things, allowed people to complain that their neighbours were illegal migrants, at which point the accused would be presumed guilty of the alleged offence and have to prove their citizenship. This vision of a society in which people suspect each other has RSS or other Sangh outfits written all over it; Vajpayee probably accommodated them. Yet the 2003 amendment does not find a mention in the book. In an otherwise splendidly wrought book, this is a major flaw; this episode might have forced a radical and more scathing reappraisal of Vajpayee, which might have led the author to a different book.

BRUNCH WITH BS ▸ KIDAMBI SRIKANTH BADMINTON PLAYER

Stoic shuttler

The first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships, Srikanth has seen dizzying heights and deep lows. He chooses to be unperturbed by the ebb and flow of life, writes Vaibhav Raghunandan

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

"It's weird, no?" the face at the other end of the screen says. "It's strange to do this looking into a device." And it is. More so, considering the last time Kidambi Srikanth and I sat down for an interview, it was across from each other, in person, in a hotel room in Delhi. This was late 2017, when Srikanth became only the fourth person in badminton history to win four BWF Super Series titles in one year — a feat that is as rare as it is difficult. A few months on, he went on to become the World No 1 — another first for a male Indian shuttler. It seems a lifetime away but Srikanth remembers — the interview itself vaguely, the phenomenal year fondly.

Since then there has been a churn. During that supremely taxing and profitable season, Srikanth suffered what became a series of unfortunate injuries, a loss of form when in recovery, and a subsequent slide in the rankings, all of which meant from being a shoo-in contender for a medal, he soon became a player desperate to get the ranking points to qualify for the Olympics last year. And he may well have, despite all of it, if it hadn't been for Covid-19. The pandemic meant multiple tournaments were cancelled, leaving him with very few to perform well in to get the points required. Despite all the records and the firsts achieved in the Olympic cycle, he ended up missing out on the Tokyo Olympics itself.

It is late morning, and we are banding together for brunch. Me: at home in Giridih, Jharkhand, with oats, fruits and coffee. He: in his room in Hyderabad, avoiding eating at this random hour (it's around 10 am) because he's on a strict schedule. Nonetheless, he casually sips on a glass of milk.

This nonchalance isn't put on; it is all for real. Kidambi Srikanth refuses to get emotionally drawn out. In 2017, when on a roll, he refused to celebrate his achievements too hard. And, in the aftermath, he has refused to drown in misery. "It was tough missing out on the Olympics, of course," Srikanth says. "But I've learnt to not dwell on things that have passed." Those close to him, his brother K Nandagopal and his childhood friends came together, expecting him to turn inward, but he didn't. Post-Tokyo, as the badminton season put itself back together, Srikanth played tournaments regularly, hoping that he'd be in good form leading into the World Championships — and then almost didn't get there, unable to secure a visa till three days before the event began.

"That's one lesson I think I have learnt. And maybe this pandemic has enhanced it. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should. I just wanted to play... take it one match at a time," says the 29-year-old, smiling gently. The choice of words is deliberate. It's athlete trope but here it means more. When expectations fizzle out, what happens to desire? It seemed less a question of sports than a zen koan: What is the sound of one hand clapping?

In Srikanth's case, this is perhaps his best being. When he thinks less, he does more. And after all the lows , there have been highs.

In December 2021, he went to Spain expecting nothing, only to become the first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships. And then, from that high, again the unexpected. He was back in Hyderabad not out of choice, forced to pull out of the India Open (a tournament he loves playing) having tested positive for Covid-19, and then pulling out of the Syed Modi International to give himself time to recover. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should.

And what you can, are the basics. Train, eat, recover and repeat. Athletes are incredibly nit-picky about their routines, especially when it comes to their diets. Their bodies, after all, aren't just vessels of consciousness but, quite literally, vehicles of gain — but even among them, India's badminton specialists are a step apart. I'd met P V Sindhu when she was a teenager, fresh off winning her first World Championship bronze, and at the time, she'd professed a love for ice-cream and in the same breath admitted she hadn't eaten one in months. She sat across the table, watching me gorge on Hyderabadi biryani for well over an hour. If she was tortured, she didn't show it.

Srikanth is a bit different. "I don't have a favourite food... I like home-cooked food, I guess," he says. His breakfast (home-cooked dosa and chutney) is eaten before he goes for early morning training, and he almost entirely follows through on home-cooked food when not in competition. When in competition, things change, though not drastically.

"To be honest, this bio bubble, being stuck in hotel rooms, doesn't bother me much," he says. What he admittedly does miss is going out to eat in different cities he plays at across the globe. And while his taste in food itself varies very little, it allows him to take in and absorb cultures.

But all things are relative. Discomfort most. Srikanth, while a world-class athlete, is also deeply connected to his roots in Guntur (Andhra Pradesh) and is aware of the devastation the pandemic has wreaked on small communities. "I'm lucky to get to do what I do," he says softly. "If ever I doubt the cards I've been dealt, all I have to do is think about everyone else who doesn't have this."

This is an often overlooked privilege of Indian sport. Many athletes have recently admitted to realising it. Despite the often haphazard and somewhat underfunded grassroots apparatus, infrastructure and facilities have survived. Sponsorships and funding have not dried up entirely.

Even when things are falling around you and unpredictability reigns, you know that your training facilities are still around waiting for you to return.

"It's one of the benefits of the centre (Pullela Gopichand's badminton academy that serves as a training base for almost all of India's top shuttlers) that it's available to us all the time," Srikanth says. "We know that very few people will go there, and those that do are colleagues and teammates... so we are safe." Another long sip of the milk follows.

Withdrawal from the two big home badminton events means that Indian badminton's reluctant prince has yet to be serenaded properly. But for the man who played without expectations and refuses to get drowned by others', this latest rise is narrative flow. Up and down and up again. For now, he's happy to take it as it goes.

"It is good to plan," he says, "but it is important to take things as they go. Everything else will follow." That is the sound of one hand clapping.

City of bangle makers looks for change

As Firozabad goes to polls on Sunday, glass workers seek better conditions, higher wages and health care

Firozabad, 18 February

"I will vote for change." That is what Mohammad Shafeeq, a bangle maker of Firozabad, says he will do on Sunday when the third phase of polling is held in Uttar Pradesh.

What may sound as an oft-cited, cliched expression is anchored in urgent, immediate concerns.

Asked what change means to him, the 22-year-old first-time voter says: "Good working conditions, medical facilities and better wages."

Not just Shafeeq, but many others working at the unit where he's employed, Kohinoor Bangle Industries, will vote for the same cause.

The district of Firozabad, known as the glassmaking hub of India, employs over 20,000 workers in its 7,874 registered industrial units, according to the state government's Department of MSME and Export Promotion website. A majority of these units are bangle manufacturing factories, which produce over 80 per cent of all utility glass products for India's domestic market.

For workers engaged in glass manufacturing, besides low wages and lack of healthcare facilities, closure of factories in the region is one of the major reasons for worry.

"Over 100 factories have closed operations in the past four years, leaving thousands without livelihood. People are ready to work here at 1,400 Celsius degrees (roughly the temperature at which glass gets moulded) for just ₹200 a day," says Shankar Singh, 45, a factory worker.

Citing the health hazards resulting from it, he adds, "Everyone has to die one day. But we are dying every day, inhaling toxic fumes while our hands pick and mould gleaming bangles."

ELECTION WATCH 2022

According to insiders, about 90 per cent of the district's working population is directly or indirectly linked to the bangle industry. Whenever a factory shuts operation, the cost of labour decreases. The rising cost of raw materials and labour, and lack of aid from the government result in factory owners exploiting workers by paying them low wages, they add.

The Covid-19 lockdown and the economic slowdown that followed worsened the conditions for workers.

Irfan Khan, 21, a second-generation worker who lost his father to tuberculosis, says his wages have not increased in the past five years. "Every day is a struggle for survival. If there are more workers looking for employment, on a rare day one might agree to work for ₹100, which I used to get when I started in 2014.

"We are working for 8-10 hours daily with chemicals and toxic gases, but get no medical attention. I fear meeting a similar fate as my father," he says.

The combination of chemicals, heat and glass poses serious health risks for workers. "Most people die of tuberculosis or other fatal infections of the lungs and chest due to the toxic gases," says Chandar Pal, a local doctor.

For women workers, the situation is only worse.

Marzina, a 42-year-old widow, works with 600 men in a factory. She gets paid 30-40 per cent less than her male colleagues, just enough for herself and her three children to live with dignity. "I don't get a widow pension. The government only gives food. I work to give my children better education and life so they don't end up working here," she says.

Asked why factories are shutting operations in UP, Khalid Naseer, the owner of Kohinoor Bangle industries, says that in the past five years the price of natural gas has almost doubled from ₹17 per standard cubic metre. Also, up to 18 per cent goods and services tax on raw materials and the increase in labour cost is breaking the back of this industry, he says.

"The day is not far when glass bangles will only be relics if the government continues to turn a blind eye to this industry. People are closing factories because workers protest demanding high wages, but if we increase product cost buyers protest."

In 2018, the UP government launched the One District One Product (ODOP) scheme to support various stakeholders on financial, technical and managerial fronts. Factory owners say the government brought in ODOP to promote local industries, but add its execution hasn't been as promising.

Alleging that the ODOP scheme in Firozabad has been a failure , former CM and Samajwadi Party chief Akhilesh Yadav recently promised a new glass city in the district if his party formed the government after the Assembly election. "If a new glass hub is required for the development of the state, we will build a new glass industry," Yadav had said.

But until the glass city gets a revamp or aid for its glassware industries, Firozabad with its population of approximately two million will be a shadow of its past.

The many faces of Vajpayee

A biography of India's first non-Congress PM to serve a full term offers an insightful and engrossing narrative

SUHIT KELKAR

In recent years, we have been seeing a number of high-profile releases of biographies of politicians associated with the Sangh Parivar. These books seem to stake their subject's claim to uncle-of-the-nationhood, as if to offer Sanghi alternatives to the Gandhi-Nehrus. In so doing, it's not that facts are always massaged; more usually, calamitous actions are made palatable through generous and glowing interpretations of motives or contexts. The idea, I suppose, is to write an Indian historical narrative that is, if not entirely Congress-mukt, at least one in which Congress figures are diminished and Sanghi characters inflated.

It is in this climate that journalist and novelist Sagarika Ghose has written Atal Bihari Vajpayee, a biography. Straight off, she tells us she is a liberal. The idea of a liberal assessing the life of right-winger Atal Bihari Vajpayee, the first non-Congressman to serve a full term as prime minister of India, raises our expectations of getting a book that inclines not towards PR but critique. In this, the book succeeds, and has many crucial insights delivered in an engrossing narrative — but with one flaw too massive to overlook.

The book shows Vajpayee's rise as a charismatic youth politician of the Sangh to Parliamentarian and finally India's prime minister, a trajectory that also brought Hindu right-wing politics to mainstream respectability, and turned the party he co-founded, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), into a serious contender on Raisina Hill. His most high-profile achievements and failures one expects to read are present in vivid colour — his soaring career taking the BJP to success, his dogged and determined tenure as an opposition politician, his ascent to the premiership, his unprecedented attempts at peace with Pakistan; also, his opportunistically riding the Ram Mandir movement and directly abetting the rath yatra (and, therefore, indirectly the Babri demolition that devastated communal relations). Also, his fiasco of a 13-day government, his inept handling of national security issues right from the hijack of Indian Airlines' IC814 to the damp squib called Operation Parakram, to his swaying readily with the breeze that boosted Narendra Modi after the Gujarat riots. There is plenty here to chew on and relish for avid fans of political nonfiction.

The writing is beautifully wrought, displaying a novelist's aptitude for making a phrase ring and an image lambent. For instance, the passage describing the demolition of the Babri Masjid is among the most visual and well-voiced I've read in years, and there are many such feats of writing.

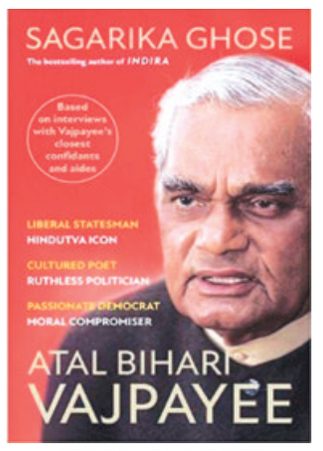

Along with the big picture, the author zooms in on the individual, points out his missteps and deviousness, doublespeak and opportunism, in detail and in refreshingly frank terms. The author's aim, we realise, is to see through the persona of the poet-politician down to the chameleonic person. Vajpayee the politician, we are told, was "(o)ne day a moderate, the next day sounding like a hardliner, one day arguing for pluralism, the next day harking to Hindu sentiments". At another place, we see this: "All through his life, Vajpayee... showed he lacked the strength of character to act against wrong, but still had the sensitivity to be ashamed about his own failings".

BOOKS & IDEAS

Vajpayee's motivations are incisively delineated: his quest for power, the moral cost be damned; his obsession with Jawaharlal Nehru and his descendants, Indira and Rajiv Gandhi; his contradictions and paradoxes, namely his allegiance to his parent organisation, the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), and also his stoking "Hindu nationalism trying to operate within the constraints of democracy".

We are shown how Vajpayee contributed to his image as a "good man in bad company", the bad company being the Sangh Parivar in the few decades following the murder of Gandhiji; and how Vajpayee was the "friend to all, enemy to none", a bridge builder indispensable in BJP's coalition era. We are presented a psychological and social map of his conflicts, internal and external, at being described as a mukhauta or mask of a "moderate" for the Sangh. It's an insightful account of his internal struggles, which evidently were monumental.

As a person, Vajpayee comes across as unconventional to say the least. Vajpayee said, "I am a bachelor, not a brahmachari." What's more, if you think you've consumed all the writing and movies there are about love triangles, wait till you learn here about Vajpayee's domestic arrangement. No spoilers, but imagine the torments that afflicted Vajpayee's parent organisation, the RSS, as it came to terms with him. We are also told of his love of good food in general and specifically meat and alcohol, convivial company, and the public stage. The author explains all this as the traits of a bon vivant and a bohemian. Along the way, we get insights into Vajpayee's relationships with mentors and colleagues in the RSS, and colleagues in the BJP, including L K Advani, Modi and others. We are provided brief portraits of these leaders as well.

The book tells us so much, but misses a crucial detail. I am reminded of Amit Shah's announcement in 2019 that the National Register of Citizens would be compiled. The NRC was enabled in 2003 by an Act of a BJP government under Vajpayee with the consent of the opposition, chiefly the Congress party.

The Vajpayee administration added Section 14A to the Citizenship Act that empowered the government to issue a "national identity card" registering "every citizen of India", and to "maintain a National Register of Indian Citizens". Surely Vajpayee had fathomed the implications? And the Vajpayee-Advani-led government apparently framed rules for drawing up local registers of citizens that, among other things, allowed people to complain that their neighbours were illegal migrants, at which point the accused would be presumed guilty of the alleged offence and have to prove their citizenship. This vision of a society in which people suspect each other has RSS or other Sangh outfits written all over it; Vajpayee probably accommodated them. Yet the 2003 amendment does not find a mention in the book. In an otherwise splendidly wrought book, this is a major flaw; this episode might have forced a radical and more scathing reappraisal of Vajpayee, which might have led the author to a different book.

BRUNCH WITH BS ▸ KIDAMBI SRIKANTH BADMINTON PLAYER

Stoic shuttler

The first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships, Srikanth has seen dizzying heights and deep lows. He chooses to be unperturbed by the ebb and flow of life, writes Vaibhav Raghunandan

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

"It's weird, no?" the face at the other end of the screen says. "It's strange to do this looking into a device." And it is. More so, considering the last time Kidambi Srikanth and I sat down for an interview, it was across from each other, in person, in a hotel room in Delhi. This was late 2017, when Srikanth became only the fourth person in badminton history to win four BWF Super Series titles in one year — a feat that is as rare as it is difficult. A few months on, he went on to become the World No 1 — another first for a male Indian shuttler. It seems a lifetime away but Srikanth remembers — the interview itself vaguely, the phenomenal year fondly.

Since then there has been a churn. During that supremely taxing and profitable season, Srikanth suffered what became a series of unfortunate injuries, a loss of form when in recovery, and a subsequent slide in the rankings, all of which meant from being a shoo-in contender for a medal, he soon became a player desperate to get the ranking points to qualify for the Olympics last year. And he may well have, despite all of it, if it hadn't been for Covid-19. The pandemic meant multiple tournaments were cancelled, leaving him with very few to perform well in to get the points required. Despite all the records and the firsts achieved in the Olympic cycle, he ended up missing out on the Tokyo Olympics itself.

It is late morning, and we are banding together for brunch. Me: at home in Giridih, Jharkhand, with oats, fruits and coffee. He: in his room in Hyderabad, avoiding eating at this random hour (it's around 10 am) because he's on a strict schedule. Nonetheless, he casually sips on a glass of milk.

This nonchalance isn't put on; it is all for real. Kidambi Srikanth refuses to get emotionally drawn out. In 2017, when on a roll, he refused to celebrate his achievements too hard. And, in the aftermath, he has refused to drown in misery. "It was tough missing out on the Olympics, of course," Srikanth says. "But I've learnt to not dwell on things that have passed." Those close to him, his brother K Nandagopal and his childhood friends came together, expecting him to turn inward, but he didn't. Post-Tokyo, as the badminton season put itself back together, Srikanth played tournaments regularly, hoping that he'd be in good form leading into the World Championships — and then almost didn't get there, unable to secure a visa till three days before the event began.

"That's one lesson I think I have learnt. And maybe this pandemic has enhanced it. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should. I just wanted to play... take it one match at a time," says the 29-year-old, smiling gently. The choice of words is deliberate. It's athlete trope but here it means more. When expectations fizzle out, what happens to desire? It seemed less a question of sports than a zen koan: What is the sound of one hand clapping?

In Srikanth's case, this is perhaps his best being. When he thinks less, he does more. And after all the lows , there have been highs.

In December 2021, he went to Spain expecting nothing, only to become the first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships. And then, from that high, again the unexpected. He was back in Hyderabad not out of choice, forced to pull out of the India Open (a tournament he loves playing) having tested positive for Covid-19, and then pulling out of the Syed Modi International to give himself time to recover. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should.

And what you can, are the basics. Train, eat, recover and repeat. Athletes are incredibly nit-picky about their routines, especially when it comes to their diets. Their bodies, after all, aren't just vessels of consciousness but, quite literally, vehicles of gain — but even among them, India's badminton specialists are a step apart. I'd met P V Sindhu when she was a teenager, fresh off winning her first World Championship bronze, and at the time, she'd professed a love for ice-cream and in the same breath admitted she hadn't eaten one in months. She sat across the table, watching me gorge on Hyderabadi biryani for well over an hour. If she was tortured, she didn't show it.

Srikanth is a bit different. "I don't have a favourite food... I like home-cooked food, I guess," he says. His breakfast (home-cooked dosa and chutney) is eaten before he goes for early morning training, and he almost entirely follows through on home-cooked food when not in competition. When in competition, things change, though not drastically.

"To be honest, this bio bubble, being stuck in hotel rooms, doesn't bother me much," he says. What he admittedly does miss is going out to eat in different cities he plays at across the globe. And while his taste in food itself varies very little, it allows him to take in and absorb cultures.

But all things are relative. Discomfort most. Srikanth, while a world-class athlete, is also deeply connected to his roots in Guntur (Andhra Pradesh) and is aware of the devastation the pandemic has wreaked on small communities. "I'm lucky to get to do what I do," he says softly. "If ever I doubt the cards I've been dealt, all I have to do is think about everyone else who doesn't have this."

This is an often overlooked privilege of Indian sport. Many athletes have recently admitted to realising it. Despite the often haphazard and somewhat underfunded grassroots apparatus, infrastructure and facilities have survived. Sponsorships and funding have not dried up entirely.

Even when things are falling around you and unpredictability reigns, you know that your training facilities are still around waiting for you to return.

"It's one of the benefits of the centre (Pullela Gopichand's badminton academy that serves as a training base for almost all of India's top shuttlers) that it's available to us all the time," Srikanth says. "We know that very few people will go there, and those that do are colleagues and teammates... so we are safe." Another long sip of the milk follows.

Withdrawal from the two big home badminton events means that Indian badminton's reluctant prince has yet to be serenaded properly. But for the man who played without expectations and refuses to get drowned by others', this latest rise is narrative flow. Up and down and up again. For now, he's happy to take it as it goes.

"It is good to plan," he says, "but it is important to take things as they go. Everything else will follow." That is the sound of one hand clapping.

"I will vote for change." That is what Mohammad Shafeeq, a bangle maker of Firozabad, says he will do on Sunday when the third phase of polling is held in Uttar Pradesh.

What may sound as an oft-cited, cliched expression is anchored in urgent, immediate concerns.

Asked what change means to him, the 22-year-old first-time voter says: "Good working conditions, medical facilities and better wages."

Not just Shafeeq, but many others working at the unit where he's employed, Kohinoor Bangle Industries, will vote for the same cause.

The district of Firozabad, known as the glassmaking hub of India, employs over 20,000 workers in its 7,874 registered industrial units, according to the state government's Department of MSME and Export Promotion website. A majority of these units are bangle manufacturing factories, which produce over 80 per cent of all utility glass products for India's domestic market.

For workers engaged in glass manufacturing, besides low wages and lack of healthcare facilities, closure of factories in the region is one of the major reasons for worry.

"Over 100 factories have closed operations in the past four years, leaving thousands without livelihood. People are ready to work here at 1,400 Celsius degrees (roughly the temperature at which glass gets moulded) for just ₹200 a day," says Shankar Singh, 45, a factory worker.

Citing the health hazards resulting from it, he adds, "Everyone has to die one day. But we are dying every day, inhaling toxic fumes while our hands pick and mould gleaming bangles."

ELECTION WATCH 2022

According to insiders, about 90 per cent of the district's working population is directly or indirectly linked to the bangle industry. Whenever a factory shuts operation, the cost of labour decreases. The rising cost of raw materials and labour, and lack of aid from the government result in factory owners exploiting workers by paying them low wages, they add.

The Covid-19 lockdown and the economic slowdown that followed worsened the conditions for workers.

Irfan Khan, 21, a second-generation worker who lost his father to tuberculosis, says his wages have not increased in the past five years. "Every day is a struggle for survival. If there are more workers looking for employment, on a rare day one might agree to work for ₹100, which I used to get when I started in 2014.

"We are working for 8-10 hours daily with chemicals and toxic gases, but get no medical attention. I fear meeting a similar fate as my father," he says.

The combination of chemicals, heat and glass poses serious health risks for workers. "Most people die of tuberculosis or other fatal infections of the lungs and chest due to the toxic gases," says Chandar Pal, a local doctor.

For women workers, the situation is only worse.

Marzina, a 42-year-old widow, works with 600 men in a factory. She gets paid 30-40 per cent less than her male colleagues, just enough for herself and her three children to live with dignity. "I don't get a widow pension. The government only gives food. I work to give my children better education and life so they don't end up working here," she says.

Asked why factories are shutting operations in UP, Khalid Naseer, the owner of Kohinoor Bangle industries, says that in the past five years the price of natural gas has almost doubled from ₹17 per standard cubic metre. Also, up to 18 per cent goods and services tax on raw materials and the increase in labour cost is breaking the back of this industry, he says.

"The day is not far when glass bangles will only be relics if the government continues to turn a blind eye to this industry. People are closing factories because workers protest demanding high wages, but if we increase product cost buyers protest."

In 2018, the UP government launched the One District One Product (ODOP) scheme to support various stakeholders on financial, technical and managerial fronts. Factory owners say the government brought in ODOP to promote local industries, but add its execution hasn't been as promising.

Alleging that the ODOP scheme in Firozabad has been a failure , former CM and Samajwadi Party chief Akhilesh Yadav recently promised a new glass city in the district if his party formed the government after the Assembly election. "If a new glass hub is required for the development of the state, we will build a new glass industry," Yadav had said.

But until the glass city gets a revamp or aid for its glassware industries, Firozabad with its population of approximately two million will be a shadow of its past.

The many faces of Vajpayee

A biography of India's first non-Congress PM to serve a full term offers an insightful and engrossing narrative

SUHIT KELKAR

In recent years, we have been seeing a number of high-profile releases of biographies of politicians associated with the Sangh Parivar. These books seem to stake their subject's claim to uncle-of-the-nationhood, as if to offer Sanghi alternatives to the Gandhi-Nehrus. In so doing, it's not that facts are always massaged; more usually, calamitous actions are made palatable through generous and glowing interpretations of motives or contexts. The idea, I suppose, is to write an Indian historical narrative that is, if not entirely Congress-mukt, at least one in which Congress figures are diminished and Sanghi characters inflated.

It is in this climate that journalist and novelist Sagarika Ghose has written Atal Bihari Vajpayee, a biography. Straight off, she tells us she is a liberal. The idea of a liberal assessing the life of right-winger Atal Bihari Vajpayee, the first non-Congressman to serve a full term as prime minister of India, raises our expectations of getting a book that inclines not towards PR but critique. In this, the book succeeds, and has many crucial insights delivered in an engrossing narrative — but with one flaw too massive to overlook.

The book shows Vajpayee's rise as a charismatic youth politician of the Sangh to Parliamentarian and finally India's prime minister, a trajectory that also brought Hindu right-wing politics to mainstream respectability, and turned the party he co-founded, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), into a serious contender on Raisina Hill. His most high-profile achievements and failures one expects to read are present in vivid colour — his soaring career taking the BJP to success, his dogged and determined tenure as an opposition politician, his ascent to the premiership, his unprecedented attempts at peace with Pakistan; also, his opportunistically riding the Ram Mandir movement and directly abetting the rath yatra (and, therefore, indirectly the Babri demolition that devastated communal relations). Also, his fiasco of a 13-day government, his inept handling of national security issues right from the hijack of Indian Airlines' IC814 to the damp squib called Operation Parakram, to his swaying readily with the breeze that boosted Narendra Modi after the Gujarat riots. There is plenty here to chew on and relish for avid fans of political nonfiction.

BOOKS & IDEAS

The writing is beautifully wrought, displaying a novelist's aptitude for making a phrase ring and an image lambent. For instance, the passage describing the demolition of the Babri Masjid is among the most visual and well-voiced I've read in years, and there are many such feats of writing.

Along with the big picture, the author zooms in on the individual, points out his missteps and deviousness, doublespeak and opportunism, in detail and in refreshingly frank terms. The author's aim, we realise, is to see through the persona of the poet-politician down to the chameleonic person. Vajpayee the politician, we are told, was "(o)ne day a moderate, the next day sounding like a hardliner, one day arguing for pluralism, the next day harking to Hindu sentiments". At another place, we see this: "All through his life, Vajpayee... showed he lacked the strength of character to act against wrong, but still had the sensitivity to be ashamed about his own failings".

ATAL BIHARI VAJPAYEE
Author: Sagarika Ghose

Vajpayee's motivations are incisively delineated: his quest for power, the moral cost be damned; his obsession with Jawaharlal Nehru and his descendants, Indira and Rajiv Gandhi; his contradictions and paradoxes, namely his allegiance to his parent organisation, the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), and also his stoking "Hindu nationalism trying to operate within the constraints of democracy".

We are shown how Vajpayee contributed to his image as a "good man in bad company", the bad company being the Sangh Parivar in the few decades following the murder of Gandhiji; and how Vajpayee was the "friend to all, enemy to none", a bridge builder indispensable in BJP's coalition era. We are presented a psychological and social map of his conflicts, internal and external, at being described as a mukhauta or mask of a "moderate" for the Sangh. It's an insightful account of his internal struggles, which evidently were monumental.

As a person, Vajpayee comes across as unconventional to say the least. Vajpayee said, "I am a bachelor, not a brahmachari." What's more, if you think you've consumed all the writing and movies there are about love triangles, wait till you learn here about Vajpayee's domestic arrangement. No spoilers, but imagine the torments that afflicted Vajpayee's parent organisation, the RSS, as it came to terms with him. We are also told of his love of good food in general and specifically meat and alcohol, convivial company, and the public stage. The author explains all this as the traits of a bon vivant and a bohemian. Along the way, we get insights into Vajpayee's relationships with mentors and colleagues in the RSS, and colleagues in the BJP, including L K Advani, Modi and others. We are provided brief portraits of these leaders as well.

The book tells us so much, but misses a crucial detail. I am reminded of Amit Shah's announcement in 2019 that the National Register of Citizens would be compiled. The NRC was enabled in 2003 by an Act of a BJP government under Vajpayee with the consent of the opposition, chiefly the Congress party.

The Vajpayee administration added Section 14A to the Citizenship Act that empowered the government to issue a "national identity card" registering "every citizen of India", and to "maintain a National Register of Indian Citizens". Surely Vajpayee had fathomed the implications? And the Vajpayee-Advani-led government apparently framed rules for drawing up local registers of citizens that, among other things, allowed people to complain that their neighbours were illegal migrants, at which point the accused would be presumed guilty of the alleged offence and have to prove their citizenship. This vision of a society in which people suspect each other has RSS or other Sangh outfits written all over it; Vajpayee probably accommodated them. Yet the 2003 amendment does not find a mention in the book. In an otherwise splendidly wrought book, this is a major flaw; this episode might have forced a radical and more scathing reappraisal of Vajpayee, which might have led the author to a different book.

BRUNCH WITH BS ▸ KIDAMBI SRIKANTH BADMINTON PLAYER

Stoic shuttler

The first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships, Srikanth has seen dizzying heights and deep lows. He chooses to be unperturbed by the ebb and flow of life, writes Vaibhav Raghunandan

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

"It's weird, no?" the face at the other end of the screen says. "It's strange to do this looking into a device." And it is. More so, considering the last time Kidambi Srikanth and I sat down for an interview, it was across from each other, in person, in a hotel room in Delhi. This was late 2017, when Srikanth became only the fourth person in badminton history to win four BWF Super Series titles in one year — a feat that is as rare as it is difficult. A few months on, he went on to become the World No 1 — another first for a male Indian shuttler. It seems a lifetime away but Srikanth remembers — the interview itself vaguely, the phenomenal year fondly.

Since then there has been a churn. During that supremely taxing and profitable season, Srikanth suffered what became a series of unfortunate injuries, a loss of form when in recovery, and a subsequent slide in the rankings, all of which meant from being a shoo-in contender for a medal, he soon became a player desperate to get the ranking points to qualify for the Olympics last year. And he may well have, despite all of it, if it hadn't been for Covid-19. The pandemic meant multiple tournaments were cancelled, leaving him with very few to perform well in to get the points required. Despite all the records and the firsts achieved in the Olympic cycle, he ended up missing out on the Tokyo Olympics itself.

It is late morning, and we are banding together for brunch. Me: at home in Giridih, Jharkhand, with oats, fruits and coffee. He: in his room in Hyderabad, avoiding eating at this random hour (it's around 10 am) because he's on a strict schedule. Nonetheless, he casually sips on a glass of milk.

This nonchalance isn't put on; it is all for real. Kidambi Srikanth refuses to get emotionally drawn out. In 2017, when on a roll, he refused to celebrate his achievements too hard. And, in the aftermath, he has refused to drown in misery. "It was tough missing out on the Olympics, of course," Srikanth says. "But I've learnt to not dwell on things that have passed." Those close to him, his brother K Nandagopal and his childhood friends came together, expecting him to turn inward, but he didn't. Post-Tokyo, as the badminton season put itself back together, Srikanth played tournaments regularly, hoping that he'd be in good form leading into the World Championships — and then almost didn't get there, unable to secure a visa till three days before the event began.

"That's one lesson I think I have learnt. And maybe this pandemic has enhanced it. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should. I just wanted to play... take it one match at a time," says the 29-year-old, smiling gently. The choice of words is deliberate. It's athlete trope but here it means more. When expectations fizzle out, what happens to desire? It seemed less a question of sports than a zen koan: What is the sound of one hand clapping?

In Srikanth's case, this is perhaps his best being. When he thinks less, he does more. And after all the lows , there have been highs.

In December 2021, he went to Spain expecting nothing, only to become the first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships. And then, from that high, again the unexpected. He was back in Hyderabad not out of choice, forced to pull out of the India Open (a tournament he loves playing) having tested positive for Covid-19, and then pulling out of the Syed Modi International to give himself time to recover. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should.

And what you can, are the basics. Train, eat, recover and repeat. Athletes are incredibly nit-picky about their routines, especially when it comes to their diets. Their bodies, after all, aren't just vessels of consciousness but, quite literally, vehicles of gain — but even among them, India's badminton specialists are a step apart. I'd met P V Sindhu when she was a teenager, fresh off winning her first World Championship bronze, and at the time, she'd professed a love for ice-cream and in the same breath admitted she hadn't eaten one in months. She sat across the table, watching me gorge on Hyderabadi biryani for well over an hour. If she was tortured, she didn't show it.

Srikanth is a bit different. "I don't have a favourite food... I like home-cooked food, I guess," he says. His breakfast (home-cooked dosa and chutney) is eaten before he goes for early morning training, and he almost entirely follows through on home-cooked food when not in competition. When in competition, things change, though not drastically.

"To be honest, this bio bubble, being stuck in hotel rooms, doesn't bother me much," he says. What he admittedly does miss is going out to eat in different cities he plays at across the globe. And while his taste in food itself varies very little, it allows him to take in and absorb cultures.

But all things are relative. Discomfort most. Srikanth, while a world-class athlete, is also deeply connected to his roots in Guntur (Andhra Pradesh) and is aware of the devastation the pandemic has wreaked on small communities. "I'm lucky to get to do what I do," he says softly. "If ever I doubt the cards I've been dealt, all I have to do is think about everyone else who doesn't have this."

This is an often overlooked privilege of Indian sport. Many athletes have recently admitted to realising it. Despite the often haphazard and somewhat underfunded grassroots apparatus, infrastructure and facilities have survived. Sponsorships and funding have not dried up entirely.

Even when things are falling around you and unpredictability reigns, you know that your training facilities are still around waiting for you to return.

"It's one of the benefits of the centre (Pullela Gopichand's badminton academy that serves as a training base for almost all of India's top shuttlers) that it's available to us all the time," Srikanth says. "We know that very few people will go there, and those that do are colleagues and teammates... so we are safe." Another long sip of the milk follows.

Withdrawal from the two big home badminton events means that Indian badminton's reluctant prince has yet to be serenaded properly. But for the man who played without expectations and refuses to get drowned by others', this latest rise is narrative flow. Up and down and up again. For now, he's happy to take it as it goes.

"It is good to plan," he says, "but it is important to take things as they go. Everything else will follow." That is the sound of one hand clapping.

City of bangle makers looks for change

As Firozabad goes to polls on Sunday, glass workers seek better conditions, higher wages and health care

NITIN KUMAR
Firozabad, 18 February

"I will vote for change." That is what Mohammad Shafeeq, a bangle maker of Firozabad, says he will do on Sunday when the third phase of polling is held in Uttar Pradesh.

What may sound as an oft-cited, cliched expression is anchored in urgent, immediate concerns.

Asked what change means to him, the 22-year-old first-time voter says: "Good working conditions, medical facilities and better wages."

Not just Shafeeq, but many others working at the unit where he's employed, Kohinoor Bangle Industries, will vote for the same cause.

The district of Firozabad, known as the glassmaking hub of India, employs over 20,000 workers in its 7,874 registered industrial units, according to the state government's Department of MSME and Export Promotion website. A majority of these units are bangle manufacturing factories, which produce over 80 per cent of all utility glass products for India's domestic market.

For workers engaged in glass manufacturing, besides low wages and lack of healthcare facilities, closure of factories in the region is one of the major reasons for worry.

"Over 100 factories have closed operations in the past four years, leaving thousands without livelihood. People are ready to work here at 1,400 Celsius degrees (roughly the temperature at which glass gets moulded) for just ₹200 a day," says Shankar Singh, 45, a factory worker.

Citing the health hazards resulting from it, he adds, "Everyone has to die one day. But we are dying every day, inhaling toxic fumes while our hands pick and mould gleaming bangles."

ELECTION WATCH 2022

According to insiders, about 90 per cent of the district's working population is directly or indirectly linked to the bangle industry. Whenever a factory shuts operation, the cost of labour decreases. The rising cost of raw materials and labour, and lack of aid from the government result in factory owners exploiting workers by paying them low wages, they add.

The Covid-19 lockdown and the economic slowdown that followed worsened the conditions for workers.

Irfan Khan, 21, a second-generation worker who lost his father to tuberculosis, says his wages have not increased in the past five years. "Every day is a struggle for survival. If there are more workers looking for employment, on a rare day one might agree to work for ₹100, which I used to get when I started in 2014.

"We are working for 8-10 hours daily with chemicals and toxic gases, but get no medical attention. I fear meeting a similar fate as my father," he says.

The combination of chemicals, heat and glass poses serious health risks for workers. "Most people die of tuberculosis or other fatal infections of the lungs and chest due to the toxic gases," says Chandar Pal, a local doctor.

For women workers, the situation is only worse.

Marzina, a 42-year-old widow, works with 600 men in a factory. She gets paid 30-40 per cent less than her male colleagues, just enough for herself and her three children to live with dignity. "I don't get a widow pension. The government only gives food. I work to give my children better education and life so they don't end up working here," she says.

Asked why factories are shutting operations in UP, Khalid Naseer, the owner of Kohinoor Bangle industries, says that in the past five years the price of natural gas has almost doubled from ₹17 per standard cubic metre. Also, up to 18 per cent goods and services tax on raw materials and the increase in labour cost is breaking the back of this industry, he says.

"The day is not far when glass bangles will only be relics if the government continues to turn a blind eye to this industry. People are closing factories because workers protest demanding high wages, but if we increase product cost buyers protest."

In 2018, the UP government launched the One District One Product (ODOP) scheme to support various stakeholders on financial, technical and managerial fronts. Factory owners say the government brought in ODOP to promote local industries, but add its execution hasn't been as promising.

Alleging that the ODOP scheme in Firozabad has been a failure , former CM and Samajwadi Party chief Akhilesh Yadav recently promised a new glass city in the district if his party formed the government after the Assembly election. "If a new glass hub is required for the development of the state, we will build a new glass industry," Yadav had said.

But until the glass city gets a revamp or aid for its glassware industries, Firozabad with its population of approximately two million will be a shadow of its past.

A biography of India's first non-Congress PM to serve a full term offers an insightful and engrossing narrative

The idea of a liberal assessing the life of right-winger Atal Bihari Vajpayee, the first non-Congressman to serve a full term as prime minister of India, raises our expectations of getting a book that inclines not towards PR but critique. In this, the book succeeds, and has many crucial insights delivered in an engrossing narrative — but with one flaw too massive to overlook.

The book shows Vajpayee's rise as a charismatic youth politician of the Sangh to Parliamentarian and finally India's prime minister, a trajectory that also brought Hindu right-wing politics to mainstream respectability, and turned the party he co-founded, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), into a serious contender on Raisina Hill. His most high-profile achievements and failures one expects to read are present in vivid colour — his soaring career taking the BJP to success, his dogged and determined tenure as an opposition politician, his ascent to the premiership, his unprecedented attempts at peace with Pakistan; also, his opportunistically riding the Ram Mandir movement and directly abetting the rath yatra (and, therefore, indirectly the Babri demolition that devastated communal relations). Also, his fiasco of a 13-day government, his inept handling of national security issues right from the hijack of Indian Airlines' IC814 to the damp squib called Operation Parakram, to his swaying readily with the breeze that boosted Narendra Modi after the Gujarat riots. There is plenty here to chew on and relish for avid fans of political nonfiction.

The writing is beautifully wrought, displaying a novelist's aptitude for making a phrase ring and an image lambent. For instance, the passage describing the demolition of the Babri Masjid is among the most visual and well-voiced I've read in years, and there are many such feats of writing.

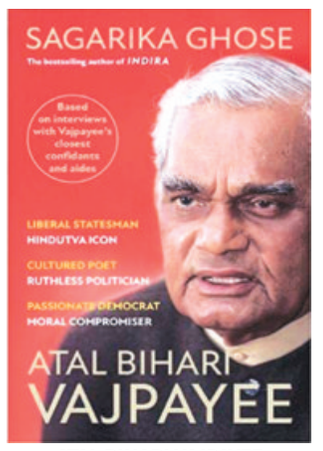

Along with the big picture, the author zooms in on the individual, points out his missteps and deviousness, doublespeak and opportunism, in detail and in refreshingly frank terms. The author's aim, we realise, is to see through the persona of the poet-politician down to the chameleonic person. Vajpayee the politician, we are told, was "(o)ne day a moderate, the next day sounding like a hardliner, one day arguing for pluralism, the next day harking to Hindu sentiments". At another place, we see this: "All through his life, Vajpayee... showed he lacked the strength of character to act against wrong, but still had the sensitivity to be ashamed about his own failings".

BOOKS & IDEAS

Vajpayee's motivations are incisively delineated: his quest for power, the moral cost be damned; his obsession with Jawaharlal Nehru and his descendants, Indira and Rajiv Gandhi; his contradictions and paradoxes, namely his allegiance to his parent organisation, the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), and also his stoking "Hindu nationalism trying to operate within the constraints of democracy".

We are shown how Vajpayee contributed to his image as a "good man in bad company", the bad company being the Sangh Parivar in the few decades following the murder of Gandhiji; and how Vajpayee was the "friend to all, enemy to none", a bridge builder indispensable in BJP's coalition era. We are presented a psychological and social map of his conflicts, internal and external, at being described as a mukhauta or mask of a "moderate" for the Sangh. It's an insightful account of his internal struggles, which evidently were monumental.

As a person, Vajpayee comes across as unconventional to say the least. Vajpayee said, "I am a bachelor, not a brahmachari." What's more, if you think you've consumed all the writing and movies there are about love triangles, wait till you learn here about Vajpayee's domestic arrangement. No spoilers, but imagine the torments that afflicted Vajpayee's parent organisation, the RSS, as it came to terms with him. We are also told of his love of good food in general and specifically meat and alcohol, convivial company, and the public stage. The author explains all this as the traits of a bon vivant and a bohemian. Along the way, we get insights into Vajpayee's relationships with mentors and colleagues in the RSS, and colleagues in the BJP, including L K Advani, Modi and others. We are provided brief portraits of these leaders as well.

The book tells us so much, but misses a crucial detail. I am reminded of Amit Shah's announcement in 2019 that the National Register of Citizens would be compiled. The NRC was enabled in 2003 by an Act of a BJP government under Vajpayee with the consent of the opposition, chiefly the Congress party.

The Vajpayee administration added Section 14A to the Citizenship Act that empowered the government to issue a "national identity card" registering "every citizen of India", and to "maintain a National Register of Indian Citizens". Surely Vajpayee had fathomed the implications? And the Vajpayee-Advani-led government apparently framed rules for drawing up local registers of citizens that, among other things, allowed people to complain that their neighbours were illegal migrants, at which point the accused would be presumed guilty of the alleged offence and have to prove their citizenship. This vision of a society in which people suspect each other has RSS or other Sangh outfits written all over it; Vajpayee probably accommodated them. Yet the 2003 amendment does not find a mention in the book. In an otherwise splendidly wrought book, this is a major flaw; this episode might have forced a radical and more scathing reappraisal of Vajpayee, which might have led the author to a different book.

BRUNCH WITH BS ▸ KIDAMBI SRIKANTH BADMINTON PLAYER

Stoic shuttler

The first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships, Srikanth has seen dizzying heights and deep lows. He chooses to be unperturbed by the ebb and flow of life, writes Vaibhav Raghunandan

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

"It's weird, no?" the face at the other end of the screen says. "It's strange to do this looking into a device." And it is. More so, considering the last time Kidambi Srikanth and I sat down for an interview, it was across from each other, in person, in a hotel room in Delhi. This was late 2017, when Srikanth became only the fourth person in badminton history to win four BWF Super Series titles in one year — a feat that is as rare as it is difficult. A few months on, he went on to become the World No 1 — another first for a male Indian shuttler. It seems a lifetime away but Srikanth remembers — the interview itself vaguely, the phenomenal year fondly.

Since then there has been a churn. During that supremely taxing and profitable season, Srikanth suffered what became a series of unfortunate injuries, a loss of form when in recovery, and a subsequent slide in the rankings, all of which meant from being a shoo-in contender for a medal, he soon became a player desperate to get the ranking points to qualify for the Olympics last year. And he may well have, despite all of it, if it hadn't been for Covid-19. The pandemic meant multiple tournaments were cancelled, leaving him with very few to perform well in to get the points required. Despite all the records and the firsts achieved in the Olympic cycle, he ended up missing out on the Tokyo Olympics itself.

It is late morning, and we are banding together for brunch. Me: at home in Giridih, Jharkhand, with oats, fruits and coffee. He: in his room in Hyderabad, avoiding eating at this random hour (it's around 10 am) because he's on a strict schedule. Nonetheless, he casually sips on a glass of milk.

This nonchalance isn't put on; it is all for real. Kidambi Srikanth refuses to get emotionally drawn out. In 2017, when on a roll, he refused to celebrate his achievements too hard. And, in the aftermath, he has refused to drown in misery. "It was tough missing out on the Olympics, of course," Srikanth says. "But I've learnt to not dwell on things that have passed." Those close to him, his brother K Nandagopal and his childhood friends came together, expecting him to turn inward, but he didn't. Post-Tokyo, as the badminton season put itself back together, Srikanth played tournaments regularly, hoping that he'd be in good form leading into the World Championships — and then almost didn't get there, unable to secure a visa till three days before the event began.

"That's one lesson I think I have learnt. And maybe this pandemic has enhanced it. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should. I just wanted to play... take it one match at a time," says the 29-year-old, smiling gently. The choice of words is deliberate. It's athlete trope but here it means more. When expectations fizzle out, what happens to desire? It seemed less a question of sports than a zen koan: What is the sound of one hand clapping?

In Srikanth's case, this is perhaps his best being. When he thinks less, he does more. And after all the lows , there have been highs.

In December 2021, he went to Spain expecting nothing, only to become the first Indian man to win silver at the BWF World Championships. And then, from that high, again the unexpected. He was back in Hyderabad not out of choice, forced to pull out of the India Open (a tournament he loves playing) having tested positive for Covid-19, and then pulling out of the Syed Modi International to give himself time to recover. You can't control everything, but what you can, you should.

And what you can, are the basics. Train, eat, recover and repeat. Athletes are incredibly nit-picky about their routines, especially when it comes to their diets. Their bodies, after all, aren't just vessels of consciousness but, quite literally, vehicles of gain — but even among them, India's badminton specialists are a step apart. I'd met P V Sindhu when she was a teenager, fresh off winning her first World Championship bronze, and at the time, she'd professed a love for ice-cream and in the same breath admitted she hadn't eaten one in months. She sat across the table, watching me gorge on Hyderabadi biryani for well over an hour. If she was tortured, she didn't show it.

Srikanth is a bit different. "I don't have a favourite food... I like home-cooked food, I guess," he says. His breakfast (home-cooked dosa and chutney) is eaten before he goes for early morning training, and he almost entirely follows through on home-cooked food when not in competition. When in competition, things change, though not drastically.

"To be honest, this bio bubble, being stuck in hotel rooms, doesn't bother me much," he says. What he admittedly does miss is going out to eat in different cities he plays at across the globe. And while his taste in food itself varies very little, it allows him to take in and absorb cultures.

But all things are relative. Discomfort most. Srikanth, while a world-class athlete, is also deeply connected to his roots in Guntur (Andhra Pradesh) and is aware of the devastation the pandemic has wreaked on small communities. "I'm lucky to get to do what I do," he says softly. "If ever I doubt the cards I've been dealt, all I have to do is think about everyone else who doesn't have this."

This is an often overlooked privilege of Indian sport. Many athletes have recently admitted to realising it. Despite the often haphazard and somewhat underfunded grassroots apparatus, infrastructure and facilities have survived. Sponsorships and funding have not dried up entirely.

Even when things are falling around you and unpredictability reigns, you know that your training facilities are still around waiting for you to return.

"It's one of the benefits of the centre (Pullela Gopichand's badminton academy that serves as a training base for almost all of India's top shuttlers) that it's available to us all the time," Srikanth says. "We know that very few people will go there, and those that do are colleagues and teammates... so we are safe." Another long sip of the milk follows.

Withdrawal from the two big home badminton events means that Indian badminton's reluctant prince has yet to be serenaded properly. But for the man who played without expectations and refuses to get drowned by others', this latest rise is narrative flow. Up and down and up again. For now, he's happy to take it as it goes.

"It is good to plan," he says, "but it is important to take things as they go. Everything else will follow." That is the sound of one hand clapping.

इकबाल कासकरला सात दिवसाची ईडी कोठडी

मुंबई, दि. १८ (प्रतिनिधी) : अंडरवर्ल्ड डॉन दाऊद इब्राहिमचा भाऊ इकबाल कासकर याला ईडीने ताब्यात घेतले आहे. यानंतर ईडीने त्याला विशेष पीएमएलए न्यायालयात हजर केले असता कोर्टाने इक्बाल कासकरला ७ दिवसाची म्हणजेच २५ फेब्रुवारीपर्यंत ईडी कोठडी दिली आहे. इक्बालचे वकिल सुलतान खान यांनी इक्बाल हा अनेक आजारांनी त्रस्त असून कस्टडीत त्यांना वैद्यकिय औषध आणि घरचं जेवण देण्यात यावे. अशी मागणी केली. न्यायालयाने त्याला परवानगी दिली. दरम्यान न्यायाधीशांनी त्याला प्रश्न विचारले. सत्र न्यायाधीश एम जी देशपांडे यांनी इकबाल कासकरला त्याचं नाव विचारल्यानंतर ईडीच्या कस्टडीत काही प्रॉब्लेम आहे का, असा प्रश्न विचारला. यावेळी इकबाल कासकरने नाही असे उत्तर दिले. ईडीने इकबाल कासकर याची चौकशी करण्याची परवानगी देण्यासाठी न्यायालयात याचिका दाखल केली होती. इक्बाल कासकरला ठाणे पोलिसांनी २०१७ मध्ये खंडणी प्रकरणी अटक केली होती. काही वर्षांपूर्वी ठाणे पोलिसांनी इकबाल कासकर आणि अनीस इब्राहिम आणि इतरांविरुद्ध रिकव्हरी प्रकरणात गुन्हा दाखल केला होता ज्यांची कागदपत्रे ईडीने ताब्यात घेतली आहेत. त्यानंतर इकबाल कासकरला ईडीने ताब्यात घेतले. दरम्यान, दाऊद इब्राहिम मनी लॉन्ड्रिंग प्रकरणात ईडीने आतापर्यंत ६ जणांचे जबाब नोंदवले आहेत. याच प्रकरणी ईडीने २ बिल्डरांना समन्स पाठवले असून, त्यांचे जबाबही नोंदवले जाणार आहे.

मातोश्रीच्या चौघांवर ईडीची नोटीस तयार

केंद्रीय मंत्री नारायण राणे यांचा खळबळजनक दावा

मुंबई, दि. १८ (प्रतिनिधी) : केंद्रीय मंत्री नारायण राणे यांना मुंबई महानगरपालिकेने त्यांच्या जुहू येथील बंगल्याची पाहणी करणे आणि बेकायदा बांधकामाची मोजणी करण्यासंदर्भात नोटीस पाठवली. यानंतर लगेचच नारायण राणे यांनी ट्विट करत खळबळजनक दावा केला आहे. मातोश्रीच्या चौघांवर ईडीची नोटीस तयार असल्याचे कळाले, असे राणे यांनी स्पष्टपणे म्हटले आहे.

राणे यांच्या या ट्विटमुळे शिवसेना विरुद्ध नारायण राणे हा संघर्ष आता अधिक तीव्र होण्याची चिन्हे दिसत आहेत.

केंद्रीय मंत्री नारायण राणे यांनी आपल्या ट्विटमध्ये सुशांतसिंह राजपूत आणि दिशा सालियन प्रकरणांचाही उल्लेख केला आहे. या दोन्ही प्रकरणांची चौकसी पुन्हा होईल असे नारायण राणे यांनी ट्विटमध्ये म्हटले आहे. तसेच त्यानंतर त्यांनी मातोश्रीच्या चौघांवर ईडीची नोटीस तयार असल्याचेही म्हटले आहे. मात्र हे चौघे कोण याचा उल्लेख राणे

यांनी आपल्या ट्विटमध्ये केलेला नाही.

नारायण राणे आपल्या ट्विटमध्ये म्हणतात की, खासदार विनायक राऊत यांच्यासाठी खास बातमी. लवकरच सुशांतसिंग व सामुदायिक बलात्कार करून तिची हत्या केली त्या दिशा सालियन या दोघांचीही आत्महत्या नव्हे हत्या झाली त्यांचीही चौकशी परत होईल. एवढेच नाही तर मातोश्रीच्या चौघांवर ईडीची नोटीस तयार असल्याचे कळाले.

शिवसेनेचे नेते, खासदार संजय राऊत यांनी नुकतीच पत्रकार परिषद घेऊन भाजप नेते किरीट सोमय्या आणि भाजप नेत्यांवर आरोप करत हल्ला चढवला होता. त्यानंतर केंद्रीय मंत्री नारायण राणे यांनी पत्रकार परिषद घेऊन संजय राऊत यांच्यावर टीकेची झोड उठवली.

आता मुंबई महापालिकेकडून राणे यांना नोटीस बजावण्यात आल्यानंतर हा वाद अधिक चिघळणार अशी चर्चा सुरू असतानाच आता राणे यांनी ट्विट करत हा नवा गौप्यस्फोट केला आहे.

रजनीश सेठ राज्याचे नवे पोलिस महासंचालक

मुंबई, दि. १८ (प्रतिनिधी) : महाराष्ट्र राज्याच्या पोलिस महासंचालकपदी रजनीश सेठ यांची आज नियुक्ती करण्यात आली. या आधी संजय पांडे यांच्याकडे प्रभारी महासंचालक पद होते. रजनीश सेठ १९८८ बॅचचे आयपीएस अधिकारी आहेत. आझाद मैदान दंगलीच्या वेळी ते मुंबईचे कायदा आणि सुव्यवस्था विभागाचे सहपोलिस आयुक्त होते. ते फोर्स वन महाराष्ट्राचे प्रमुख राहिलेले आहेत. गृह विभागाचे प्रधान सचिव म्हणूनही सेठ यांनी जबाबदारी सांभाळलेली आहे. तसेच ते दोन वर्षे मुंबईचे अतिरिक्त पोलिस आयुक्तही होते.

संजय पांडे यांच्याकडे एप्रिल २०२१ पासून राज्याच्या पोलिस महासंचालक पदाचा अतिरिक्त हंगामी कार्यभार सोपवण्यात आला होता. मात्र, पांडे यांना या पदावरून हटवावे आणि त्या जागी कायमस्वरूपी अधिकाऱ्याची नियुक्ती करावी, अशी मागणी मुंबई उच्च न्यायालयात ॲड. दत्ता माने यांनी जनहित याचिकेद्वारे केली होती. त्यावरील सुनावणी दरम्यान न्यायालयाने राज्य सरकारवर ताशेरे ओढले होते.
