NEW EXPORT RULES HIT DEFENCE, EV SECTORS

China's fresh rare earth curbs raise supply risks for India

NITIN KUMAR
New Delhi, October 9

CHINA ON THURSDAY expanded export controls on rare earths and related technologies, a move that sharpens its hold over critical mineral supply chains and poses new challenges for countries like India seeking to build self-reliance in advanced manufacturing.

The revised rules, issued by the ministry of commerce, have extended the restrictions beyond raw minerals to include processing technologies, equipment, and intellectual property, and for the first time explicitly bar supplies linked to foreign defence and semiconductor applications.

These measures could complicate India's efforts to secure rare earth inputs vital for its electric vehicle, renewable energy, and defence sectors.

With China controlling about 60% of global rare earth mining and nearly 90% of processing capacity, any tightening of exports is felt worldwide, and especially in economies like India that rely on Chinese-origin magnets and materials.

The new regime mandates export licences for goods that contain Chinese rare earths

TIGHTER POLICY

Beijing now restricts not just rare earth minerals, but also related tech for defence and semiconductor use

India faces new hurdles in EV, renewable energy, and defence manufacturing

New rules require export licences and prohibit overseas JVs without Beijing's nod—especially for tech sectors or are made using Chinese machinery, while prohibiting Chinese companies from entering overseas joint ventures or collaborations without official approval.

Applications linked to defence or advanced semiconductor manufacturing are expected to face

China demands written assurances from Indian buyers that supplies won't reach the US; India has yet to respond broad denials or lengthy reviews, as Beijing cites national security grounds.

Industry executives said that China's latest move has revived concerns about supply disruptions last seen after its earlier curbs in April, which caused temporary shortages and forced several manufacturers to renegotiate contracts.

The latest restrictions, they said, may constrain sourcing options and slow ongoing investments in high-value manufacturing.

Further, China has laid down the condition regarding end-user certification, whereby it is seeking written assurances from Indian buyers that rare earth supplies will not be diverted to the US or used in weapons systems. India has still not made its position clear on this demand.

Heavy rare earth magnets are essential for EV motors, radar systems, and wind turbines.

Substitutes such as ferrite magnets offer lower efficiency and performance. While New Delhi has been exploring alternative partnerships with Japan and South Korea and pushing domestic exploration, analysts said that the new restrictions placed by Beijing would create hurdles here also.

As reported, the government is close to approving a ₹7,300 crore incentive scheme to promote rare earth magnet manufacturing.

Won't yield to external pressures on farm trade, says Chouhan

SANDIP DAS
New Delhi, October 9

INDIA WILL NOT be yielding to external pressure even as the world continues to grapple with "weaponisation" of trade and tariffs, Agriculture Minister Shriyash Singh Chouhan said on Thursday.

"Amid volatile geo-political situations where nations are fighting each other, where trade and tariffs are treated as weapons, where nations are nailing the world at their whims... In such a situation, India has to choose its path," Chouhan said at the 20th Annual General Meeting of the PHECCI.

"In the current situation, one cannot rely on the global under the PL480 programme. Since then, he added that the country has come a long way in ensuring food security.

Later while briefing the media, Chouhan said the government has set a target to increase pulses production by 40% to 5 million tonne (MT) in the next six years by 2030-31 crop year from current level of 24.2 MT through increasing area and boosting productivity under a mission mode.

With a budgetary allocation of ₹11,440 crore, a centrally sponsored scheme - Mission for Aatmanirbharta in Pulses - will be operational between 2025-26 and 2030-31, which recently got cabinet approval. It would benefit over 20 million farmers.

The agriculture minister also recalled India's dependence on American food aid
