LINKEDIN SURVEY MAPS AI'S CORPORATE IMPACT

Millennials dominate India's C-suite as AI reshapes leadership

BISWAJIBAN SHARMA
New Delhi, July 8

INDIA'S CORPORATE LEADERSHIP is undergoing a generational shift, with millennials now accounting for more than half of the country's C-suite, while artificial intelligence is rapidly reshaping how top executives make decisions, according to new research by professional networking platform LinkedIn.

The study shows millennials now comprise 55% of India's C-suite executives, overtaking older generations as companies increasingly reward adaptability, cross-functional experience and technology-led decision-making over traditional linear career paths. Their representation at the top has risen 14.5% over the past seven years, reflecting changing leadership priorities across corporate India.

expertise. They increasingly want leaders who can manage technology disruption, navigate ambiguity and build businesses across functions," said a senior leadership consultant, requesting anonymity. "AI is accelerating that transition."

The transition is unfolding alongside AI's rapid entry into executive decision-making. Nearly 84% of Indian C-suite leaders said AI-generated inputs have become an important part of their strategic decisions, while an equal proportion reported that the technology is creating entirely new roles within their organisations.

The findings suggest India's leadership model is shifting away from the conventional formula of spending decades within a single industry before reaching the corner office. According to LinkedIn's platform data, executives with careers confined to one industry now account for only 58% of the C-suite, down from nearly 80% seven years ago, highlighting growing demand for leaders with diverse business and functional experience.

"Companies are no longer looking only for deep domain boardroom priorities, where talent strategy is becoming as critical as technology investment.

"Boardrooms are realising that AI is not merely a technology project but a business transformation exercise," said a senior executive at a global executive search firm. "The biggest competitive advantage will come from leaders who can anticipate skill gaps before they become business risks."

Innovation is emerging as the primary benchmark for AI investments, with nearly nine out of ten executives saying they expect the technology to drive new products. The shift is also changing the capabilities expected of top executives. Four of the five fastest-growing skills among India's C-suite are now AI-related, including AI agents, AI productivity, retrieval-augmented generation and AI strategy, underscoring how technology expertise is becoming a defining attribute of corporate leadership.

When conspiracy took centre stage

SANDIP G
New York, July 8

LIONEL MESSI MIGHT be the World Cup's overwhelming protagonist, shaping moments and defining games. But a background crew, Gianni Infantino, Donald Trump, enraged managers, referees, and the error-checking mechanism, are putting in heavy shifts as support cast. Add conspiracy theories, corruption and rigging allegations, and the World Cup has the intrigue of a spy movie.

The background score intensified when Egypt manager Hosam Hassan remarked, after Argentina's controversial 3-2 turnaround, that officials had been pressured to keep Messi in the tournament. "Perhaps they wanted Messi to stay in the running," Hassan said after the match. "In football, there are sometimes external factors that go beyond the technical aspects. The world champions received support at every level."

He was referring to two incidents that decided the game: Mostafa Zico's goal scrapped for a foul on Argentina's Lisandro Martinez at the other end of the pitch, and Alexis Mac Allister pulling Mohammed Salah inside the box before Enzo Fernandez scored the winner.

Going strictly by the book,

Egypt head coach Hossam Hassan is shown a yellow card by referee Francois Letexier after making FIFA's anti-racism 'X' gesture while protesting Enzo Fernandez's stoppage-time goal during the World Cup Round of 16 match against Argentina

the VAR's judgement cannot be argued: under International Football Association Board protocol, VAR checks the attacking phase before every goal, and a "clear and obvious" foul sends the referee to the pitch-side monitor to rule it out.

Whether Marwan Attia's foul, standing on Martinez's foot, was clear and obvious is as debatable as the foul on Salah, both soft offences lost in the grey shades of a referee's perception, not blatant ones. An emotional Hassan, Egypt's all-time highest goal scorer, said: "Life is unfair. The world is unfair. Okay, but why isn't there any fairness in sports? I'm not convinced by this outcome and by the way things unfolded in this match." He paused and said: "The referee is unfair, God is sufficient for me and the best disposer of affairs. He's wasting the effort of an entire nation. The cup is directed towards Argentina."

The decisions divided the football world. "Sometimes, even warriors lose because the devils decide the story should end differently," Real Madrid manager Jose Mourinho produced another ripping one-liner. Even chess legend Gary Kasparov chimed in, calling FIFA "a corrupt joke, playing favorites for stars" over the disallowed goal, and, separately, invoking Croatia's own complaints: "Croatia robbed, now Egypt. But you cannot shame the shameless."

To bolster the theory of FIFA staging an Argentina triumph, social media dug up every prior decision that had favoured Argentina, foremost among them Messi catching Algeria captain Aissa Mandi's calf and Achilles tendon with his studs up in the opening game. Algeria complained, the decision stood. "It's pointless commenting on hypothetical situations, but everyone saw it, including me," Algeria head coach Vladimir Petkovic said.

World Cups have a long history of scandals: the dodgy refereeing that eased co-hosts South Korea into the 2002 semifinals at Europe's expense, two presidents shaking hands to spare Brazilian legend Garrincha a suspension, Argentina dictator General Jorge Videla's visit to Peru's dressing room to allegedly enable the four-goal win Argentina needed to reach the 1978 final, or the disgrace of Gijon.

FOOT NOTES

EU CALLS FOR PROBE

Dozens of European lawmakers (EU) have gathered support to launch a probe in the European Parliament against FIFA boss Gianni Infantino over his involvement in the decision to permit US striker Folarin Balogun to play against Belgium despite a red card. Balogun's suspension was lifted after US President Donald Trump's intervention.

BECKHAM, HENRY HAIL MESSI

Ex-England skipper David Beckham heaped praise on Lionel Messi after the Argentina captain inspired his side's dramatic comeback win over Egypt, praising not only Messi's brilliance on the pitch but also his character away from football. Beckham was the mastermind behind Messi's historic move to Inter Miami in 2023. Meanwhile, former French int'l Thierry Henry

EGYPT LODGES COMPLAINT

The Egyptian Football Association (EFA) has submitted a formal complaint to the FIFA against French referee Francois Letexier and his officiating team after Egypt's dramatic 2-3 loss to Argentina in their WC round of 16 (R16) match. This has said that Messi reminded everyone that he is "not human". Messi scored the equaliser against Egypt.

Ignited discussions over refereeing calls and FIFA's management of the WC.

SWITZERLAND REACHES QF

Switzerland made it to the WC quarter-finals (QF), beating Colombia 4-3 on penalties after a goalless draw at the last R16 clash. The Swiss, last made it to the WC QF in 1954. This will be their fourth QF in history.
