US bars China supercomputer firms, institute from buying American parts

The US thinks that the Chinese companies pose a major risk of being involved in activities contrary to the national security of United States

REUTERS
WASHINGTON, June 22

THE US COMMERCE Department said on Friday it was adding several Chinese companies and a government-owned institute involved in supercomputing with military applications to its national security "entity list" that bars them from buying US parts and components without approval. The export restriction announcement adding the firms to what is effectively a trade blacklist is the latest effort by the Trump administration to restrict the ability of Chinese firms to gain access to US technology amid an ongoing trade war. The department said it was adding Sugon, the Wuxi Jiangnan Institute of Computing Technology, Higon, Chengdu Hanguang Integrated Circuit and Chengdu Hanguang Microelectronics Technology—along with numerous aliases of the five entities—to the list over concerns about military applications of the supercomputers they are developing.

Wuxi Jiangnan Institute of Computing Technology is owned by the 56th Research Institute of the General Staff of China's People's Liberation Army, the Commerce Department said, adding "its mission is to support China's military modernization."

Huawei files lawsuit against US Commerce Department over seized equipment

HUAWEI TECHNOLOGIES CO Inc filed a lawsuit against the US Commerce Department on Friday challenging whether telecommunications equipment it sent from China to the United States, and then back to China, is covered by Export Administration Regulations, according to a court filing. The lawsuit is the latest salvo in a battle between the US government and Huawei. Washington says the Chinese company's telecommunications gear could be used by Beijing to spy. Huawei denies that is the case.

The Chinese Embassy in Washington did not immediately return a request for comment. China's state broadcaster, China Radio International, said in an editorial on Saturday that there was one of a series of recent actions by the United States that violated the consensus reached by President Donald Trump and his Chinese counterpart Xi Jinping in Argentina last December.

"No matter whether it is aimed at suppressing Chinese technology or its long-term economic development, or put pressure on China in the trade negotiations, the United States will not achieve its aims," it said. In 2015, the Commerce Department added China's National University of Defense Technology (NUDT) to the list "because of its use of US-origin microchips, boards, and components to power supercomputers believed to support nuclear explosive simulation and military simulation activities."

The Commerce Department said on Friday that since 2015 NUDT has procured items under the name Hunan Guofang Kai University using four separate, additional addresses not already on the entity list. The department said on Friday it is now adding Hunan Guofang and the four addresses to the list. The companies "pose a significant risk of being or becoming involved in activities contrary to the national security and foreign policy interests of the United States," the Commerce Department said.

In May, the Trump administration added China's Huawei Technologies Co Ltd to the entity list and 68 affiliates in more than two dozen countries. US President Donald Trump has said that the United States could resolve complaints about Huawei as part of a trade deal. The world's two largest economies have ratcheted up tariffs in a battle over what US officials call China's unfair trade practices. The United States, China, the European Union and Japan have all announced plans to build export-capable supercomputers.

In March, a US government-led group said it was working with chipmaker Intel Corp and computer maker Cray Inc to develop and build the country's fastest supercomputer by 2021 for conducting nuclear weapons and other research. The Department of Energy and the Argonne National Laboratory in Illinois are working on a supercomputer dubbed "Aurora with Intel," the world's biggest supplier of data centre chips, and Cray, which specializes in the ultra-fast machines.

The $500 million contract for the project calls on the companies to deliver a computer with so-called exaflop performance—that is, capable to perform 1 quintillion—per second. This week, Intel Corp, a major chip supplier, said it was working with Softbank Holdings Group owned chips, firm Arm Holdings to make its chips work with Arm's supercomputers.

Amazon gets US patent to use delivery drones for surveillance service

JUNE 22

AMAZON.COM INC is exploring using drones not just to deliver packages but also to provide surveillance as a service to its customers, according to a patent granted by the United States Patent and Trademark Office.

The delivery drones can be used to record video of consented user's property to gather data that can be analysed to look out, say for example, a broken window, or a fire or if a garage door was left open during the day, the patent described.

According to the patent, the surveillance function of the drone can be limited through geo-fencing, a technology used to draw a virtual boundary around the property under surveillance.

Any image or data that the drone captures outside the geo-fence would be obscured or removed.

The application for the patent was filed by the e-commerce giant in 2015 and granted on June 4.

Earlier this month, Amazon said it will start drones delivering packages to customers in 30 minutes or less in the coming months.

US cities brace for immigration raids, say they will not participate

REUTERS
WASHINGTON, June 22

US CITIES EXPECTING to be hit by a wave of immigration raids intended to deport recently arrived families who are in the United States illegally said on Friday they would not cooperate with federal authorities.

In a call with reporters earlier this week, Mark Morgan, the acting director of the US Immigration and Customs Enforcement, said the agency would target for deportation families that have received a removal order from a US immigration court.

The Washington Post reported on Friday that the operation is slated to launch on Sunday and is expected to target up to 2,000 families facing deportation orders in as many as 10 US cities, including Houston, Chicago, Miami

The number of migrants apprehended crossing the US-Mexico border surged in May to the highest level since 2006 and Los Angeles.

A spokesman for ICE denied the report, saying ICE would not offer details on operations before their conclusion. Chicago's Mayor Lori

Lightfoot said she had terminated ICE's access to Chicago Police Department databases related to federal immigration enforcement activities in response to the threat of raids. "I have also personally spoken with ICE leadership in Chicago and voiced my strong objection to any such raids."

Further, I reiterated that CPD will not cooperate with or facilitate any ICE enforcement actions," Lightfoot said in a statement.

The Los Angeles Police Department said in a series of tweets it would not participate or assist in the immigration enforcement actions.

Houston's Mayor Sylvester Turner noted in a statement that the "rich cultural contributions" of the city's immigrants, and said: "The city does not try to do ICE's job, nor does it try to impede ICE." Morgan said earlier this week that ICE would deport families who had recently arrived illegally in the United States to discourage more Central Americans from arriving. The number of migrants apprehended crossing the US-Mexico border surged in May to the highest level since 2006. Most of the migrants are fleeing violence, poverty and corruption in Central America, and are seeking asylum, a process that can take years.

Many families are released into the United States for the duration of the process because of limits on how long children can be detained. The Department of Homeland Security did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Separately, the governor of Texas said the state was deploying 1,000 National Guard troops to the border and said more than 45,000 people were apprehended illegally crossing in the past three weeks.

FDA approves drug for loss of sexual desire in women

THE US DRUG regulator on Friday approved Palatin Technologies' and Amgen Pharmaceuticals' drug to restore sexual desire in premenopausal women, the latest attempt to come up with a therapy that some have dubbed as "female Viagra".

The therapy, Vyleesi, will compete in a market which has seen previous attempts fail. Analysts have said that a drug that safely and effectively treats loss of sexual desire in women could eventually reach annual sales of about $1 billion. Palatin's shares jumped 44% to $3.93, while Amgen shares rose 1.5% after market. Vyleesi, chemically known as bremelanotide, activates pathways in the brain involved in sexual desire, helping premenopausal women with hyposexual sexual desire disorder (HSDD).

The drug will compete with Sprout Pharmaceuticals' Addyi, a once-daily pill that was approved for HSDD in 2015 with a warning restricting alcohol use when on the medication. It will be available from September through select pharmacies.

Boris Johnson's brush with police puts leadership bid in turmoil

BLOOMBERG
June 22

BORIS JOHNSON'S BID to become the UK's next prime minister was thrown into turmoil after an argument with his partner prompted police to visit his London residence. Officers were called to the home on shares with Carrie Symonds shortly after midnight on Friday, six hours after he was confirmed as the front-runner in the race to succeed Theresa May.

Police said they found no cause for action as both Johnson and Symonds were safe and well after a neighbour raised concerns for her safety. But the incident dominated Saturday's UK newspapers and threatened to damage Johnson's campaign at a critical time in the Conservative Party leadership contest. The front-runner is set to face his first public question over the episode in front of an audience of Tory party members on Saturday. Foreign Secretary Jeremy Hunt, his only remaining rival in the contest, will also appear at the event in Birmingham, England.

Hunt wrote to Johnson on Friday evening before the altercation became public, effectively accusing him of hiding from questions and avoiding media scrutiny. "This late incident will make that more difficult for the former London mayor as reporters are now stalked out on his doorstep," Hunt wrote in the letter released to the media. "But if we can't handle it with friends we won't deserve to lead against our opponents."
