Govt set to revamp IndiaAI Mission

WHILE THE CURRENT IndiaAI Mission has largely focused on building compute infrastructure and supporting the development of indigenous AI models, there is a growing feeling that the rapid proliferation of open-source models has altered the landscape. "There are already tens of thousands of open-source models available globally and the number continues to grow rapidly. The question is no longer simply about creating another model. The focus is shifting towards building capabilities that ensure that our long-term interests are protected," officials said. According to them, discussions are now centred on four broad pillars – sovereignty, safety, talent and research – which are expected to form the basis of a revamped IndiaAI framework. The sovereignty pillar is expected to focus on ensuring that critical AI infrastructure, datasets and strategic capabilities remain available to Indian users irrespective of geopolitical developments. The recent restrictions imposed on access to advanced AI systems have reinforced concerns that frontier technologies could increasingly become subject to national security considerations and export controls. Safety is emerging as another key area as governments worldwide grapple with questions around AI governance, cybersecurity risks, model misuse and accountability. Officials said India intends to develop capabilities not only in deploying AI systems but also in evaluating, auditing and securing them.

Protests erupt against G7

THOUSANDS OF DEMONSTRATORS converged Sunday to show their discontent against the G7 group of rich countries, with US President Donald Trump and counterparts set to hold a summit starting a day later in nearby France.

Environmentalists and feminists joined foes of imperialism, defenders of independent media, supporters of Palestinian rights and others in a lakeside park in Geneva for a march across town. A boat whose sail read "No G7" floated by, as sunbathers and swimmers basked under blue skies. Swiss and French authorities have deployed thousands of police to provide security for the three-day summit starting Monday in the resort town of Evian-les-Bains, France. The leaders are set to discuss issues including the Middle East, Ukraine and global economic imbalances.

Authorities have blocked off roads, banned unauthorised gatherings and pledged financial support for businesses who could be hit by unrest. Scores of businesses and shops have boarded up their storefronts with wooden panels as a precaution – leery of upheaval that left a trail of damage in Geneva during a similar summit in Evian in 2003. Only seven of the 35 roadway border crossings will remain open.
