'AI can address cybersecurity talent gap'

Steve Ledzian, CTO, Google Cloud Security, JAPAC at Mandiant, said using the dark web for monitoring malicious indicators would be outdated due to AI

AASHISH ARYAN
New Delhi, 3 March

Organisations will need to use artificial intelligence (AI) to address the cybersecurity talent gap by delegating low-level threat analysis work to chatbots and machine learning so as to enable the analysts to do more complex and meaningful work, said Steve Ledzian, the chief technology officer (CTO) of Google Cloud Security at Mandiant Asia Pacific in Japan.

Most organisations, he said, discover cyberattacks through external entities like a law enforcement agency or a security vendor despite significant investment in internal security controls and tools.

"This highlights the need for better detection efficacy, efficiency, scalability, and improved telemetry retention for investigations. On the services side, there is continued demand for red teams, tabletop exercises, and compromise assessments," he said.

With the help of AI, bad faith cybersecurity actors have shifted focus to edge devices such as virtual private network gateways and file-sharing appliances which typically lack endpoint detection and response capabilities, Ledzian said.

"These devices are internet-connected yet also link to internal networks, making them ideal hiding spots for attackers. If defenders recognise this trend early, they can implement compensatory measures, such as enhanced network detection and response (NDR) telemetry," he said.

The days of organisations using the dark web for monitoring and collecting knowledge about malicious indicators of compromise such as domains and hashes will be outdated due to the use of AI, he said.

Though the nature of cyberattacks varies slightly between different geographies based on the digital maturity of that region, ransomware, business e-mail compromise, and supply chain attacks remained consistent globally, he said.

Metropolis to strengthen UP presence with acquisition of Scientific Pathology

SOHINI DAS
Mumbai, 3 March

India's second-largest pathology laboratory chain Metropolis Healthcare is set to acquire Agra-based Scientific Pathology in an all-cash deal that would range between ₹55 crore and ₹83 crore based on some revenue and Ebitda milestones.

The move aims to strengthen Metropolis' position in the western Uttar Pradesh market where Scientific Pathology has a strong presence. This is Metropolis' second acquisition this year after it acquired Delhi NCR-based specialised cancer diagnostics player Core Diagnostics valuing it at ₹246.8 crore.

With both acquisitions, the share of North in revenue will reach 13 per cent in FY26, compared to an 8 per cent now.

The deal would be made through Metropolis' wholly-owned subsidiary Metropolis Clinical Pathology Private Limited. Under the agreement, Metropolis Clinical Pathology will acquire and operate all laboratories and collection centres of Scientific Pathology in Agra and neighbouring towns through a slump sale transaction.

"The consideration for the acquisition will range between ₹55 crore and ₹83 crore, determined at 12.2-times of the adjusted Ebitda over a defined assessment period. The transaction will be executed through a Securities Subscription Cum Shareholders' Agreement, backed by Metropolis Healthcare Limited. Upon completion, Metropolis Clinical Pathology will transition from a wholly owned subsidiary while continuing to be an integral part of the Metropolis Healthcare Group," the firm said.

TurboML to initiate $12 million AI foundational model in India

SURAJEET DAS GUPTA
New Delhi, 3 March

The founders of San Francisco-based TurboML — a real-time machine learning platform — have launched a strategic initiative to bring in artificial intelligence (AI) researchers of Indian origin from across the world to build an AI foundational model based on Indian languages.

Siddharth Bhatia, one of the company's founders, said they had discussed their plan with the Ministry of Electronics and Information Technology (MeitY), and recently met MeitY Minister Ashwini Vaishnaw to explain their effort to build the AI foundational model based on Indian languages for under $12 million within 10 months. The project will be funded by Silicon Valley investors and other global sources.

Bhatia says he is close to bringing in Indian experts from teams that have led models like ChatGPT, Anthropic's Claude, Google's Gemini, and Meta's Llama, as well as contributors to the original Transformers paper. The model being contemplated is a for-profit entity so that it can reinvest in further development.

"After a detailed analysis, we have arrived at an investment requirement of $11.5 million — which will include building it in two phases and covering the cost of processing on graphics processing unit (GPU), training and retraining datasets, and hiring people. We will undertake most of the work in India and could do it with a core team of around 30. It will take us 10 months to complete," said Bhatia. He did not rule out the possibility of government assistance to support

■ Efforts on to rope in AI researchers of Indian origin to build a foundational AI model in Indian languages

■ To bring in Indian AI experts who have worked with ChatGPT, Anthropic's Claude, Google Gemini, and Meta's Llama their efforts. Bhatia says the investment cost accounts for the current commercial rate for one hour of GPU usage, though this could decrease under the MeitY subsidy scheme to $1 per hour. He notes that with the launch of DeepSeek from China, many researchers are now developing innovative ways to build AI models at low cost, unlike the billions of dollars spent by ChatGPT and others. He also highlights that the main challenge in building foundational models in India is the lack of internet-scale data combined with linguistic diversity.

"Even the English we speak is interspersed with Hindi, which is a common conversational style in other languages as well. This requires code-switching between languages and dialects," said Bhatia.
