ADRESSABLE MKT ACROSS DISABILITY-LINKED PRODUCTS & SERVICES

Purple economy is a $150-bn opportunity for India: Deloitte

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA
New Delhi, July 14

INDIA'S PURPLE ECONOMY is estimated to present a total addressable market opportunity of about $150 billion across disability-linked products and services, according to a report unveiled on Tuesday.

The report by Deloitte and EnAble India, positions disability inclusion as a national economic growth agenda.

The Purple Economy is an economic framework that recognises persons with disabilities as customers, workers, entrepreneurs, innovators, taxpayers and contributors to growth, and treats accessibility and inclusion as drivers of market creation, productivity, dignity and shared prosperity.

Based on a conservative estimate of 100 million persons with disabilities, this report estimates a Total Addressable Market of approximately $150 billion across disability-linked products and

WHAT IS PURPLE ECONOMY?

■ The Purple Economy is an economic framework that recognises persons with disabilities as customers, workers, entrepreneurs, taxpayers and contributors to growth services. As India enters its next phase of economic growth, the opportunity lies not only in expanding rights and access but in converting participation into new markets, enterprises, jobs and innovation," the report stated.

Union Minister for Skill Development and Entrepreneurship Jayant Chaudhary launched a White Paper on the report. "There needs to be more purple audits and reports as part of the balance sheet reporting and the corporate governance laws. Talk about how many of your new hires, recruits, top management are people with disabilities," said the minister.

The report argues that when the unmet needs, aspirations and participation of persons with disabilities are recognised at scale, they open new markets, better services, inclusive infrastructure, jobs, livelihoods and enterprises for the entire economy.

By turning barriers into innovation signals and participation into value creation, the Purple Economy can support India's vision of Viksit Bharat 2047, it emphasised.

International evidence from organisations such as the International Labour Organisation and the World Bank has suggested that disability-linked exclusion can cost countries between 3-7% of annual GDP.

These losses arise not only because persons with disabilities are excluded from jobs, but because entire support systems remain underbuilt: families lose productive time, businesses miss customers, governments carry higher long-term dependency costs and markets fail to develop needed services.

A creaking Argentina vs squeaking England ready for a semifinal scrap

SANDIP G
Atlanta, July 14

THE MANAGERS, AS managers are, were not happy with their troops in the quarterfinals.

"I am not happy with the performance in every sense," England boss Thomas Tuchel bemoaned. "The commitment is there, but we made life very difficult for us in how we played, in the way we played. Sloppy, not fast enough. Not repetitive enough. We were lucky today," he added, much to the bemusement of Jude Bellingham, the afternoon's hero.

Hours later, in a milder tone, Argentina's supremo admitted his team's struggle to douse Switzerland, even when they were down to 10 men. "It was very difficult for us to win the duels, to put more than five or six passes together," he confided. He didn't say his team was lucky, but "ultimately we found the solutions." The team's entry to the semifinal, he emphasised, was historic, "but we should have played better."

Unlike France and Spain, smooth-sailing vessels, Argentina and England have creaked and squeaked their way to the last four, weathering literal and metaphorical storms, surviving scares, crossing the line through force of personalities and moments of individual wizardry and defiance, bound by a thread of positive volatility.

Imbalances reek in midfield and flanks. Argentina's midfield has looked weary. Fatigue has crippled Leandro Paredes and Rodrigo de Paul, both in their early 30s. Running the runs for Messi in two games decided by extra time has eventually caught up with them. Paredes did not last the game against Switzerland, and when he was substituted, Argentina lost their control in the midfield, and were fortunate that they enjoyed numerical superiority. Head-to-head, England's midfield is a superlative product, younger, quicker, stronger and technically sturdier. But the talisman Declan Rice is fighting his fitness; Eberechi Eze, reduced to cameos, has not recreated the same flourish as he had in his Arsenal days; Elliot Anderson, for all his diligence, lacks the all-action-hero verve of Rice.

A peak Rice and Bukayo Saka would have been a different story and could have run Argentina's weary midfield ragged. Alexis Mac Allister and Enzo Fernandez are not exactly fierce ball shielders and prone to being dispossessed under pressure and in swift transitions, which Bellingham and Co could orchestrate. Out of possession, Mac Allister and Fernandez can sometimes be a burden. But both have a knack of scoring goals from improbable situations. If the game boils down to durability and physicality, England would lick their lips in excitement. The caution: Argentina with their doggedness have worn down far superior physical teams.

The right wing bothers both sides. England have a right-side concern. Winger Noni Madueke has pace, but lacks incisiveness, and has a tendency to lose the ball under pressure. His link-up between the right-backs is dodgy, compounded by England's injury concerns. If Reece James, reduced to substitute shifts, starts and could sustain his intensity, England could be quicker and stronger on that side. But Ezri Konsa, while aerially superior, can be ponderous at times.

Argentina's counterparts, Nahuel Molina and Gonzalo Montiel tend to run out of steam in less than an hour. Both Egypt and Switzerland exploited their susceptibility. They can't be blamed either, because they have to perform the heavy-lifting of a largely immobile midfield, creating depth in the absence of natural wingers. England could ratchet up the pace on the side. Nico O'Reilly and Anthony Gordon could put them to the sword with their blinding speed and trickery. England, arguably have a sturdier centre-back pairing and depth in quality too. If the match loiters into extra time, England have better reinforcements to rely on.

But for all of England's marginal superiority in midfield, defence, physicality and height (Argentina's is 179.7cm and England's 184.2cm), Argentina have a shorthand solution for all their woes: Lionel Messi. Teams can tie him in knots for 90 minutes and in two seconds he could change the game.

Nasscom flags dip in engineering skills as AI takes over routine work

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA
New Delhi, July 14

INDIA RISKS BUILDING a technology workforce that is merely AI-reliant rather than truly AI-native if the industry and academia fail to preserve deep engineering expertise, IT industry body Nasscom has warned.

While over 90% of the country's early-career tech professionals are already adopting artificial intelligence, the apex industry body cautioned that the decline of routine coding work must not lead to a drop in fundamental technical skills.

"India is uniquely positioned to emerge as a global hub for AI-native technology talent. It is important to keep in mind that AI skills penetration is not the same as being AI-native... India risks scaling a workforce that is AI-reliant rather than AI-native."

"Academia must strengthen fundamentals, while industry must redesign onboarding and mentorship to ensure that the decline of routine work does not lead to a decline in deep engineering expertise," Sangeeta Gupta, senior vice president and chief strategy officer, Nasscom, said.

Nasscom on Tuesday launched the inaugural edition of its report, "The State of AI-Native Talent in India," which introduces a structured industry benchmark to assess AI capabilities among early-career tech professionals with up to three years of experience, including final-year engineering students. According to the study, while roughly two-thirds of India's young workforce are "AI-proficient", only 23% qualify as "AI-native".

However, the report highlighted significant headroom to deepen this talent base by strengthening engineering judgement and technical depth.
