City surgeon makes documentary on cuckoo

AJIT PATOWARY

GUWAHATI, March 10: City-based general surgeon and filmmaker Dr Satyakam Phukan recently completed a captivating short documentary film on the Asian species of the cuckoo called kuli in Assamese, under his film production unit Ri-Mita Bolsabi. The film is based on the cuckoos found in Guwahati. “Guwahati still can host a large number of cuckoos with its abundant greenery,” said Dr Phukan.

The film has brought to light the requirements for the survival and proliferation of a cuckoo population in an urban locale. Dr Phukan said that firstly, in Guwahati, there are sufficient trees to provide the birds with food. Secondly, the kuli is a brood parasite, that is, it lays eggs in the nest of other birds. The male of the kuli is of black colour. They therefore choose to lay their eggs in nests of birds with black colour.

The most common brood host bird is the common crow, which is present in large numbers in Guwahati city. They also lay eggs in the nest of the thick billed crow, a type of raven, found less commonly in Guwahati.

The kuli is well known for its cooing. But contrary to the common belief, it is the male kuli that produces this sweet sound in the mating season. The mating season starts with the beginning of the spring season in Assam, which coincides with Bohag Bihu or Rongali Bihu. The festival is celebrated in mid-April, in the beginning of the Assamese month of Bohag and the Assamese New Year as well.

The kuli with its characteristic calling, therefore, finds an important place of reference in Assamese literature and music since time immemorial, said Dr Phukan.

The film has also brought to light the less known fact that the hill myna also plays a common brood host bird for the cuckoo. The hill myna is present in some localities of Guwahati.

Through the film, Dr Phukan also familiarises the common people with the female cuckoo of the Asian genus of the bird species, which is significantly different from the male birds of this bird species in size, colour, etc.

capital, lamenting this “very sad and tragic day”.

The crash came on the eve of a major, annual assembly in Nairobi of the UN Environment Programme, which learnt of the crash with “deep regret” but did not say whether any delegates were on the plane.

“We can only hope that she is not on that flight,” Peter Kimani, who had come to fetch his sister at Nairobi’s Jomo Kenyatta International Airport (JKIA), told this news agency shortly after news of the crash reached those waiting in the arrivals hall.

State-owned Ethiopian Airlines, Africa’s largest carrier, said the ill-fated Boeing 737-800 MAX had taken off at 8:38 am (local time) from Bole International Airport and “lost contact” six minutes later.

Scheduled to land in Nairobi at 10:25 am (0725 GMT), it came down instead near the village of Tulu Fara outside Bishoftu.

An AFP reporter said there was a massive crater at the crash site, with belongings and airplane parts scattered widely.

Rescue crews were retrieving human remains from the wreckage. Ethiopian Airlines confirmed “there are no survivors”. Police and troops were on the scene, as well as a crash investigation team from Ethiopia’s civil aviation agency.

In the Kenyan capital, family members, friends and colleagues of passengers were frantically waiting for news at the airport. “I am waiting for my colleague, I just hope for the best,” added Hannah, a Chinese national.

Ethiopian Airlines said Kenya had the largest number of casualties with 32, followed by Canada with 18, Ethiopia with nine, then Italy, China, and the United States with eight each. Britain and France each had seven people on board, Egypt six, the Netherlands five and India four. Four were UN passport-holders.

Eleven countries in Africa and 13 in Europe had citizens among the victims. – PTI personnel who will be on the field, across the length and breadth of India assuring smooth elections. India is very proud of the EC for assiduously organising elections for several years,” Modi tweeted.

In the press briefing, Arora also reassured the nation of the EC’s “solemn resolve and deep commitment to fulfil its constitutional mandate to conduct free, fair and credible elections”.

He said all political advertisements on the social media would need pre-certification and that the candidates would have to give details of their social media accounts to the Election Commission.

The election will pit the BJP-led National Democratic Alliance against mostly different Opposition groupings in various States, including of the Congress, Left and regional forces which are continuing to work out a grand alliance to minimise division of votes against the Modi Government.

The BJP has worked out a seat-sharing formula with some new allies and several old partners, by even making concessions in States like Bihar. However, the Opposition parties are yet to do so in several States.

After losing three Assemblies last year, the BJP believes its Lok Sabha campaign is back on track following decisions like 10 per cent quota for the general category poor, money transfer to farmers and a populist Budget.

What has injected further confidence into the NDA fold is the fronting of the nationalist plank in the poll campaign after the Indian Air Force strike on terrorist camps in Pakistan following the Pulwama terror attack in which 40 CRPF personnel were killed. – PTI

Short stories by deceased police officer released

GUWAHATI, March 10: Duroir Ghortadhvani, a collection of short stories by police officer Partha Bijay Dutta, who breathed his last on February 7, was released here today.

The book was released by Kuladhar Saikia, the Director General of Assam Police and an acclaimed writer himself, at a function held at the Institution of Engineers in the presence of several dignitaries, including Homen Borgohain, Bhaskar Jyoti Mahanta, Govinda Prasad Sarma and Dinesh Goswami.

This is the second collection of short stories by the writer which also include two write-ups by Ratna Bharali Talukder and Arindam Borkotoky about the writings of the Late Partha Bijay Dutta. The book has been published by Akhar Prakash.

Talukder said that the collection was an effort of various friends of Dutta, and some copies of the book were also informally released on February 3, when the writer was alive. – City Correspondent

Barefoot counsellors: pillars of support for victims of domestic violence

MAMATA MISHRA

GUWAHATI, March 10: Having been in an extremely abusive relationship for long 18 years, Karabi Baishya (name changed) almost forgot what happiness and freedom meant until she gathered the courage to open up before Moon Bora, a barefoot counsellor of her locality, who took up the matter with the police and district authorities, apart from giving psycho-social support to her.

When counselling on domestic violence seems a nascent concept even in progressive societies, a handful of women are making a big difference in rural Assam with a unique concept of barefoot counselling, reaching out to women who are in abusive relationships or are facing other sorts of gender-based community violence.

Unlike the customary counselling through government agencies, the barefoot counsellors are a group of trained women leaders reaching out to the aggrieved women to provide them emotional and psychological support, and referring the extreme cases to other State agencies for legal aid as and when needed.

An initiative of North East Network (NEN), a women’s rights organisation of the State, barefoot counselling has picked up very well at Mirza in Kamrup district, Sipajhar in Darrang district and Doigrung in Golaghat district since its inception in 2016.

Barefoot counselling is a brainchild of Anurita Pathak Hazarika, project director of NEN.

Barefoot counsellors have so far received 107 cases from women in distress, with most cases involving domestic violence.

“Our barefoot counsellors are not some university passed-out counsellors with high flying degrees. They are the community leaders who have been professionally trained by us to reach out to women in vulnerable situations. We arrange 12-day training for our counsellors through MIND India. Now they are also recognised as service providers under the State Department of Social Welfare,” said Hazarika, who has actively built up a support system for such counsellors by linking them to government agencies.

“During one of our field surveys, we realised the need to have a concrete mechanism to address women’s issues. A woman might not reveal her domestic life to someone from outside. In the first place, she does not have access to such counsellors,” she added.

The journey, however, has been far from smooth. “At first, we operated from informal setups like an open field, from beneath a tree, or even from the living rooms of the counsellors. But in some cases they had to face threats and even assaults from anti-social elements. Gradually, three grameen mahila kendras (GMK) were opened to give a more formal and functional setup to the counsellors. The centres are now becoming rights-based centres for women and also for adolescents,” she added.

Apart from addressing the cases of crime against women, the centres hold cultural programmes and even work for promoting financial independence among women, providing them threads for weaving, etc.

Working at a small level, the GMKs can be replicated in other districts, where a large number of cases of crime against women are not reported due to fear and social stigma associated with them.

Other than cases of domestic violence, the centres have also handled some cases of rape, trafficking and community violence.
