| 1           | To meet incremental working capital requirements                                   | The Company's working capital requirement is steadily increasing and is expected to rise further to support its operational growth and planned capital expenditure. A significant portion of this requirement is driven by the need to maintain high inventory levels due to price fluctuations, production cycles, wide product range, and varying demand patterns across industries. Additionally, growing trade receivables resulting from revenue expansion and a lenient credit policy, along with advances to suppliers for securing raw materials at favourable prices, further contribute to the increased working capital needs.                        |
