IN-SPACE to support start-ups in National EO constellation project

SELF-RELIANCE IN SPACE. Consortium to develop 12-satellite network over 4-5 years

Sindhu Hariharan
Chennai

Pawan Goenka
Chairman, IN-SPACE

This is the first time ever that Indian private sector will be building a satellite system of this size and complexity and IN-SPACE will support the endeavour to ensure India's autonomy in critical technologies, Pawan Goenka, Chairman, IN-SPACE, Department of Space, Government of India, said on Wednesday.

Speaking to businessline about the selection of a private sector consortium for the ambitious ₹1,200-crore programme of building India's own earth observation (EO) satellites, Goenka said that while the winning consortium quoted a zero bid and does not expect any financial support from the government, the space promotion body will support them in other ways to launch and monetise this project.

"Under the PPP model, the government had offered to pay up to ₹350 crore for this project, but the winning bidder did not want any money from the government," he said.

PROGRAMME VISION

A consortium led by Pixxel Space, with partners Dhruva Space, PierSight and Sat-Sure, on Tuesday, won IN-SPACE's proposal to build India's National EO constellation of satellites.

The team will develop a 12-satellite network over the next four-five years to ensure that all satellites are manufactured domestically, launched on Indian rockets and controlled from within the country.

Goenka said that the aim is to create an Indian-owned satellite constellation that reduces dependence on foreign data and meets most domestic EO needs.

"With industry also stepping up to build, own and launch from India, we will grow capability across design, manufacturing, launch and ground systems while keeping operations within the country, even as the consortium monetises the data," he said. "We also see this as a repeatable template for future PPPs across other space segments," he added.

The idea was to also have a commercial justification for the private players to have Indian constellation of satellites to meet data needs of both government as well as private sector. While there is no financing involved, IN-SPACE will be offering the consortium technical support, especially around the technical review of payload, Goenka said.

"The payload is the heart of it [the programme] and determines the sanctity of the data that come out," he added. "IN-SPACE will also work with various government departments, both Central government and State government, to generate demand for data that will be coming out of this constellation," he said.

While Pixxel has already launched its hyperspectral satellites, IN-SPACE authorities note that it is still a challenging exercise to integrate the optical lenses and the optical system (which includes the detectors) with the satellite system and the assembly of the whole system.

GROUND STATION

"We have put a mandatory requirement to put a ground station or control stations in India, and the consortium also needs to put a ground station across the globe for the acquisition of the global data," Rajeev Jyoti, Director - Technical Directorate IN-SPACE, said.
