A NEW ROUTE New guidelines may include mandating pillion riders to wear a helmet and a reflector jacket

Two-wheeler Taxis may Soon be Legalised

Rajat.Arora@timesgroup.com

New Delhi: Two-wheeler taxis may soon start plying in India, offering commuters a cheaper option than the regular four-wheeler cabs and potentially adding substantially to the country's strained public transport system.

The road transport and highways ministry is set to amend the Central Motors Vehicle Act to legalise use of two-wheelers as taxis and frame comprehensive policy guidelines in this regard, officials said. The central law does not allow two-wheeler taxis, although a few states such as Goa and Haryana permit the use of two-wheelers as taxis. American online transportation firm Uber had to shut down its motorbike taxi service in Bengaluru due to regulatory issues.

"We need a comprehensive policy that is common to all states since motorbike taxis could create a large mode of public transport along with creating employment opportunities. Such services can work very well in suburban areas and be economical as well," a senior ministry official said, requesting not to be identified.

Only those two-wheelers that are registered as commercial vehicles will be allowed to ply as taxis, the official said. "Drivers that have commercial licence will only be able to ferry people. It has been brought to our notice that a lot of taxi aggregators are running private vehicles as two-wheeler taxis. This will not be permitted," he said.

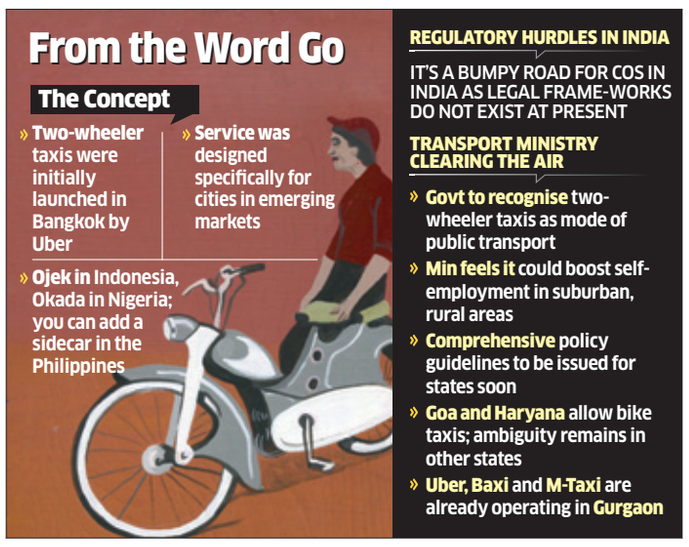

The ministry is planning to come up with a separate set of safety guidelines that include mandating pillion riders to wear a helmet along with a reflector jacket. An empowered group of state transport ministers will soon start working on the guidelines, the official said.

"The licensing for two-wheeler taxis should be common across all states so that the legality part is cleared," said Arunabh Madhur, founder of M-Taxi, one of the leading two-wheeler taxi operators in Gurgaon. "We as a company have also made representation to the Union transport ministry," he said.

CLEAR GUIDELINES
The licensing for two-wheeler taxis should be common across all states so that the legality part is cleared

Once the central government clears the ambiguity in the law, the states will have model guidelines to follow, he said.

The Centre is likely to legalise ride-share services being provided by several transport aggregators that are currently not allowed under the law, the official cited earlier said. He said the government is also considering setting up transport regulators in each state to oversee the functioning of cab aggregation companies and defining commercial car-pooling to remove ambiguity.

TMP Buys Majority Stake in Reliance Entertainment's Unit

Our Bureau

Mumbai: Reliance Entertainment's majority stake in Hollywood firm IM Global will be pared to 30% after an equity infusion of $200 million by Tang Media Partners (TMP).

The Anil Ambani-led entertainment company had picked up a majority stake in IM Global, an independent international film and television production, sales and distribution company in 2010 from founder Stuart Ford.

TMP will have a controlling 51% stake in the company and takeover the operations of IM Global, while Reliance Entertainment will remain as financial investor after the restructuring. Donald Tang, the founding partner of TMP, will be the executive chairman of the company.

In a separate transaction, IM Global and TMP have also partnered with Asian internet company, Tencent, in a new television production joint venture, which will operate under the IM Global Television banner.

The combined vehicles will provide IM Global and IM Global Television with significant capital to further invest in film and television programming development, production and distribution and expand its global distribution.

Tencent's subsidiaries include social platforms, communications, online games, news and information, and media and content, including video programming.

Reliance Entertainment and Ford will maintain seats on the parent company's board and on the IM Global Television board along with TMP and Tencent.

POST RESTURCTURE
TMP will have a controlling 51% stake in the company and takeover the operations of IM Global, while Reliance Entertainment will remain financial investor

Ford will continue as CEO of IM Global under a new multi-year employment deal besides serving in a similar capacity within the new television venture.

Current IM Global Television president Mark Stern will also continue in his role.

"These are landmark deals for our company. In addition to injecting significant growth capital into our fast-growing film and television operations, this puts us in business with one of the most seasoned and respected entrepreneurs on the Hollywood-China axis in Donald Tang," said Ford.

Los Angeles-based IM Global also has offices in New York, London, Mexico City and Beijing.

"Combining Tang Media Partners' strategic and financial partners, through these simultaneous transactions, is all geared to expand and accelerate the growth of IM Global. We plan to integrate our operating teams and partners globally to further drive IM Global's success in film, TV, and beyond," Tang said in a statement.

Micromax Looks to Enter China for a Place on the Top-five List

Co may start with a single model, which could be rolled out through a strategic partnership

Gulveen.Aulakh@timesgroup.com

New Delhi: Micromax, India's No. 2 handset maker, is looking to enter China next year for volume growth in the world's largest phone market in a bid to be among the top five in the world by 2020. For a tilt at the world's top rankings, Micromax may raise cash through a public listing or a strategic partnership in the next two years.

Sources aware of internal plans of the company say it could start with a single model, which may be rolled out in partnership with a Chinese ecommerce major. It would have a different product portfolio for the Chinese market while it could also consider local partners for a different operating system.

Micromax did not comment on specific plans for China but said that India's largest home-bred handset maker was striving to be part of the top five club in the world.

"The vision will be realised by going to multiple countries, by being not only a hardware company but a hardware and services company, and hence the experience," the company said in a statement Friday.

"For this, Micromax is open for a financial event over the next 24 months".

The company, which has seen a slew of top level management changes in the past year, has entered a few international markets including Russia, where it is currently No 3.

With a 12.6% share of the smartphone market, it has been a steady No. 2 behind Samsung in India, the world's fastest growing market where it is facing intense competition from Chinese players like Lenovo, Vivo, Oppo and Xiaomi besides local players.

China, which has 800 million smartphones in circulation, is facing saturation. However, it still accounts for 31% of the global volumes, which makes the market a very compelling reason for Micromax, say analysts.

"Micromax cannot achieve its major objective of being No 5 in the world if it is not in the largest mobile phone market in the world," said Navkendar Singh, senior research manager at IDC India.

Micromax's strategy of "offence" would in fact be the "best form of defense," especially in China, from where a large number of companies have been coming to India to seek growth, despite the intense competition, Singh added.

This is exactly what Vikas Jain, one of the four co-founders of Micromax Informatics, said.

DGCA Sacks Air Pegasus' Safety Chief

New Delhi: The Directorate General of Civil Aviation (DGCA) has sacked the safety chief and suspended five pilots of Bengaluru-based regional carrier Air Pegasus after the regulator found innumerable safety violations by the airline.

The aviation regulator has also written to the airline chief to ensure that safety rules violations do not happen in the future.

The chief of safety is a pilot of the airline chosen by the DGCA to report any safety violations to the regulator and is a representative of the regulator on the airlines staff.

"We have found severe safety violations in the airline. A large number of flights were found to be not following safety rules while landing. In one of the instances, the aircraft computer asked the pilot to go around but the pilot landed the aircraft," said a senior DGCA official, who did not want to be identified. — Our Bureau

'Mobiles, PCs and TVs are India's Most Dangerous E-waste'

Our Bureau

New Delhi: Mobile phones, personal computing devices and televisions are the 'most dangerous' electronic waste, or e-waste, generated in India, which is emerging as one of the world's top producers of these discarded products, according to a study.

India is likely to generate 5.2 million metric tonnes of e-waste per annum by 2020 from the current level 1.8 million tonnes, growing 30% annually, the study by Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry of India-cKinetics said.

The volume of e-waste generated around the world is expected to reach 130 million tonnes in 2018 from 93.5 million tonnes in 2016.

Computers, televisions and mobile phones are the most dangerous because they contain high levels of lead, mercury and cadmium, the report said. They are also discarded more frequently because of their short lifespans.

The report comes after the government declined requests from iPhone maker Apple and contract manufacturer Foxconn to sell certified refurbished, or second-hand, phones in India, to prevent dumping of hazardous e-waste in the country.

E-waste typically includes discarded computer monitors, motherboards, cathode ray tubes, printed circuit boards, mobile phones and chargers, compact discs, headphones, white goods such as liquid crystal display and plasma televisions.

GROWING WASTE
India is likely to generate 5.2 million metric tonnes of e-waste per annum by 2020 from the current level 1.8 million tonnes, growing 30% annually

In India, the government, public and private (industrial) sectors account for almost 75% of e-waste generation.

The share of individual households is about 16% and the rest is of the e-waste contributed by manufacturers, according to the study.

Only 1.5% of the country's e-waste is recycled due to poor infrastructure, legislation and framework, which lead to a waste of diminishing natural resources, irreparable damage to the environment and the health of the people working in industry.

Over 95% of the e-waste is managed by the unorganised sector and scrap dealers, who dismantle the discarded products instead of recycling them.

As per the study, about two-thirds of e-waste workers in India suffer from respiratory ailments such as asthma and bronchitis.

According to reports, the statement did not disclose the terms of the agreement and the deal size but the hotel will continue to remain a Taj-branded property.

A spokesperson for the Taj Group declined to comment on the development. An email query sent to New England Development and Eastern Real Estate remained unanswered till press time on Wednesday. According to media reports, the transaction is scheduled to close in July, subject to approvals. Recently, Tata-owned Indian Hotels Company Ltdhad announced its plans to sell the property for at least $125 million in an effort to trim debt.

Roger Enrico, PepsiCo Hero in Cola War With Coke, Dies at 71

Stephen Miller

Roger Enrico, who as chief executive officer of PepsiCo used a sponsorship deal with Michael Jackson to nearly pull even in the marketplace with Coca-Cola, has died. He was 71.

He died on June 1, according to the Wall Street Journal, which didn't identify the source of its information. His death occurred while snorkeling in the Cayman Islands, where he had a residence, the Cayman Compass reported, citing local police.

Prior to leading the Purchase, New York-based company as CEO, Enrico was head of its Pepsi-Cola USA division and oversaw a marketing strategy that positioned the soft-drink maker as "the choice of a new generation."

The campaign, beginning in 1983, helped spook Coca-Cola into changing the formula for its market-leading product. The 1985 introduction of "New Coke" is often cited as one of the great marketing blunders of all time.

"After 87 years of going at it eyeball to eyeball, the other guy just blinked," Enrico wrote at the time in a memo to his staff.

"Roger Enrico was, quite simply, one of the most creative marketers of his or any generation," Indra Nooyi, PepsiCo CEO said June 2 in an emailed statement. "He was a risk-taker, never afraid to challenge the status quo or make bold moves to get ahead."

With PepsiCo for most of his career, Enrico got his start in 1971 as an associate brand manager for Funyuns, an onion-flavor snack, in the company's Frito-Lay division, according to a 1998 article in Beverage World.

At different times, he led each of PepsiCo's three major units, Frito-Lay, Pepsi-Cola, and restaurants, which included Pizza Hut, Taco Bell and KFC.

As PepsiCo CEO, Enrico restructured the company to focus on beverages and snacks. He spun off the restaurants into Tricon Global Restaurants, now called Yum! Brands, and engineered a spinoff of the bottling business in 1999. Enrico acquired the fruit-drink maker Tropicana Products from Seagram. In 2000, he announced the $13.4-billion acquisition of Quaker Oats, producer of Gatorade, which was completed the following year.

Roger A Enrico was born November 11, 1944, in Chisholm, Minnesota, according to Marquis Who's Who. As a teenager he worked at an independent bottling plant washing bottles and putting on labels. Later he sold pots and pans door to door, according to a 1985 profile in the Chicago Tribune. In 1965, he received a bachelor's degree in finance from Babson College in Wellesley, Massachusetts. — Bloomberg

Zika may be transmitted by oral sex too

Docs Report Case Where An Infected French Man Transmitted Virus To His Partner

Donald G McNeil Jr

Scientists raised the possibility that the Zika virus can be transmitted by oral sex — perhaps even by kissing — on Friday in a letter to The New England Journal of Medicine describing one such case in France.

A single incident may seem trivial. But until early this year, there was only one known instance of sexual transmission of the Zika virus — a 2008 case in which a mosquito researcher just back from Africa infected his wife in Colorado.

Now scientists believe that sexual transmission is an important driver of the Zika epidemic in the Americas. Cases have been reported in 10 countries where no mosquitoes carry the virus, including France, Germany, Italy, Portugual and New Zealand.

In the French case, a 46-year-old man returned to Paris from Rio de Janeiro on February 10, shortly after experiencing Zika symptoms in Brazil — fever, headache and a rash

AP

DEADLY BITE

— that had just ended when he reached France.

He and a 24-year-old partner had sex seven times between February 11 and 20, each involving vaginal sex without ejaculation and oral sex with ejaculation. The woman fell ill on February 20. Both were tested for Zika infection on February 23. The man had high levels of the virus in his semen and urine, but none in his blood or saliva. The woman had the virus in her urine and saliva, and antibodies to the virus in her blood. But a vaginal swab was negative for the infection.

The two were using oral sex as a form of birth control, said Dr Yazdan Yazdanpanah, of the National Institute of Health and Medical Research in Paris and one of the report's authors.

"I don't think this changes anything, but it shows you how elaborate the number of avenues of possible transmission can be," said Dr William Schaffner, head of preventive medicine at Vanderbilt University Medical School. He agreed the most likely transmission route was oral sex, although he said it was possible that the woman was infected by pre-ejaculate during vaginal sex, or that the couple's recollections of each sex act were imperfect. Scientists propose to build first synthetic human genome

Washington: A group of 25 scientists on Thursday proposed an ambitious project to create a synthetic human genome, or genetic blueprint, in an endeavour that is bound to raise concerns over the extent to which human life can or should be engineered. A synthetic human genome potentially could make it possible to create humans who lack biological parents - raising the spectre, for instance, of made-to-order human beings with special genetic enhancements.

A synthetic human genome potentially could make it possible to create humans who lack biological parents — raising the spectre, for instance, of made-to-order human beings

The scientists said that was not their aim. They said potential applications from a synthetic human genome include: growing transplantable human organs; engineering immunity to viruses; engineering cancer resistance; and accelerating vaccine and drug development using human cells and organs.

The project aims to build such a synthetic genome and test it in cells in the laboratory within 10 years. The project, which arose after meeting of scientists last month at Harvard University, was unveiled in the journal Science. They acknowledged that their undertaking is controversial and said they would seek public involvement and the consideration of ethical, legal and social implications.

They said they hoped to get $100 million in public and private funding to launch it this year and expect total costs of less than the $3 billion used for the original Human Genome Project that completely mapped human DNA for the first time in 2003. A synthetic genome would involve using chemicals to create the DNA present in human chromosomes. REUTERS

Dogs were domesticated twice: Study

Reuters

DIG IT UP: Hungarians take part in a grave digging championship in Debrecen on Friday

Dogs may have been domesticated not once, as widely believed, but twice, say scientists who found that man's best friend may have emerged independently from two separate wolf populations. Some scholars argue that humans first domesticated wolves in Europe, while others claim this happened in Central Asia or China. Researchers reconstructed the evolutionary history of dogs by first sequencing the genome of a 4,800-year old medium-sized dog from bone excavated from Ireland. The team obtained mitochondrial DNA from 59 ancient dogs living between 14,000 to 3,000 years ago and then compared them with the genetic signatures of more than 2,500 previously studied modern dogs. The review shows that early dogs appear in both the East and West more than 12,000 years ago, but in Central Asia no earlier than 8,000 years ago. It suggests that dogs were first domesticated from geographically separated wolf populations on opposite sides of the Eurasian continent.

Wearable kidney may help replace dialysis

Washington: A wearable artificial kidney may be a viable dialysis technology that can give people with end-stage kidney disease the freedom to move around during treatment, according to the results of a new clinical trial.

The technology may become an alternative to conventional hemodialysis for people with end-stage kidney disease. Present-day treatment generally requires three sessions a week on a stationary machine that restricts patients' ability to walk around while it is attached and running.

In contrast, a wearable device would allow patients to be mobile and untethered. It could also provide additional benefits from longer sessions or more frequent days of dialysis.

The clinical trial of a prototype for such a device was performed with seven patients at University of Washington Medical Centre in the US. The patients were treated with the device for up to 24 hours. The US Food and Drug Administration-authorised trial was conducted to determine the safety and efficacy of the device. The device effectively cleared the blood of waste products, like urea, creatinine and and phosphorus, while also removing excess water and salt. PTI

This bionic leaf turns sunlight into liquid fuel

Boston: Scientists have developed a bionic leaf that uses solar energy to split water molecules and hydrogen-eating bacteria to produce liquid fuels, that surpasses the efficiency of photosynthesis seen in fastest growing plants.

"Before, people were using artificial photosynthesis for water-splitting, but this is a true A-to-Z system,

Getty Images

Bionic leaf 2.0 uses solar energy to split water molecules and hydrogen-eating bacteria to produce liquid fuels and we've gone well over the efficiency of photosynthesis in nature," said Daniel Nocera, professor at Harvard University in the US.

While the study shows the system can be used to generate usable fuels, its potential does not end there, said Pamela Silver, professor at Harvard Medical School.

Dubbed "bionic leaf 2.0," the new system builds on previous work by Nocera, Silver and colleagues which — though was capable of using solar energy to make isopropanol — faced a number of challenges.

Chief among those challenges was the fact that the catalyst used to produce hydrogen — a nickel-molybdenum-zinc alloy — also created reactive oxygen species, molecules that attacked and destroyed the bacteria's DNA, researchers said.

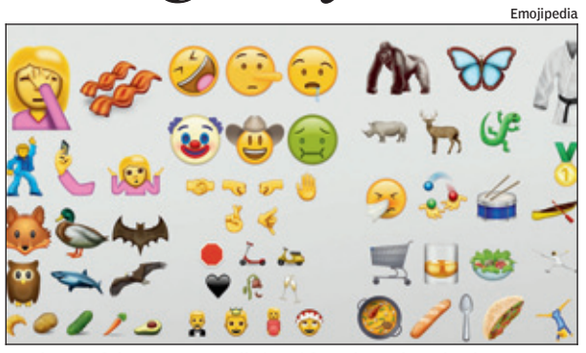

To avoid that problem, researchers were forced to run the system at abnormally high voltages, resulting in reduced efficiency.

"We designed a new cobalt-phosphorus alloy catalyst, which we showed does not make reactive oxygen species. That allowed us to lower the voltage, and that led to a dramatic increase in efficiency," Nocera said.

The system can now convert solar energy to biomass with 10% efficiency, Nocera said, far above the one per cent seen in the fastest growing plants. In addition, researchers were able to expand the portfolio of the system to include isobutanol and isopentanol. PTI

Mock-ups of the 72 new emoji slated for release in Unicode 9.0

Andrew Griffin

Everyone's emoji vocabulary is about to receive a huge expansion as authorities roll out new pictures.

The Unicode Consortium, which maintains the standards for emoji so that they can work across sites, is sending out a new update. And it includes a wide variety of pictures.

Some of those serve obvious purposes, like a picture that shows someone rolling on the floor laughing or a shrug. Others are slightly more unexpected, like a face with a cowboy hat and a gherkin.

Yet more tend to build on existing pictures to give them more possibilities. That includes the addition of a glass of milk, clinking glasses and a tumbler full of whiskey, building on the existing beer and martini glasses.

It could still take some time for the emoji to actually arrive on your phone. Though the consortium will approve the new emoji towards the end of the month, they have to be drawn and integrated into particular operating systems by the firms that make them.

That has led to some problems with the little images, which experts have said can potentially cause huge amounts of confusion because each company draws them differently. THE INDEPENDENT

The Bible's newest translation is in emoji

Liam Stack

And God said, "Let there be emojis."

Well, not really. But the less-internet savvy among us may be forgiven for that interpretation thanks to a new translation of the Bible that has rendered the Christian scriptures in emojis and other forms of online slang.

The book, Bible Emoji: Scripture 4 Millenials, is based on a Twitter feed that has been posting emojified Bible verses for almost a year.

The book was released Sunday on iBooks, the online Apple bookstore. It contains more than 3,000 pages of smiling yellow faces, twinkling stars and cartoon serpents. Angel emojis descend from the heavens, bush emojis burn and ocean emojis are parted. NYT NEWS SERVICE
