ट्रेन में महिला का शव मिलने के मामले में मणिपुर से दंपति गिरफ्तार

चेन्नई/इंफाल, 30 अगस्त (भाषा)।

इस महीने की शुरुआत में आगरा में तमिलनाडु एक्सप्रेस ट्रेन में एक स्यूटकेस के अंदर एक महिला का शव मिलने के मामले में पुलिस ने दो लोगों को गिरफ्तार किया है। चेन्नई में पुलिस सूत्रों ने रविवार को बताया कि असम के कछार जिले के निवासी माणिक उद्दीन लश्कर (22) और ओड़ीशा के केंदुझरगड़ जिले की रहने वाली उसकी पत्नी भगवती मांडी (21) को कई राज्यों में संचालित तलाश अभियान के बाद मणिपुर के जिरिबाम जिले के कांजिपुर से गिरफ्तार किया गया। इंफल के अधिकारियों ने बताया कि दोनों आरोपियों को मणिपुर और तमिलनाडु पुलिस की संयुक्त टीम ने

गिरफ्तार किया। मणिपुर पुलिस के एक अधिकारी ने कहा, "गिरफ्तार किए गए लोगों को गुड्डुवांचेरी के थाना प्रभारी को सौंपा जा रहा है।" यह वारदात पांच अगस्त को तब सामने आई, जब तमिलनाडु एक्सप्रेस के आगरा स्टेशन पहुंचने पर अनारक्षित डिब्बे में यात्रियों को एक लाल रंग की लावारिस अटैची से दुरीष्ट आई। राजकीय रेलवे पुलिस (जीआरपी) के अधिकारियों ने अटैची की जांच की तो उसमें एक अज्ञात महिला का सिर कटा और क्षत-विक्षत शव मिला।

बाद में जांच और फारेंसिक

विशेषण के जरिए शव की शिनाख्त ओड़ीशा की 38 वर्षीय हयातुनु निशा के रूप में हुई। वह गुड्डुवांचेरी में रहकर एक निजी कंपनी में काम करती थी।

पहुंचाने की व्यवस्था करने के लिए महाराष्ट्र के मुख्यमंत्री देवेंद्र फडणवीस का आभार जाता।

महाराष्ट्र के मुख्यमंत्री कार्यालय के अनुसार, फडणवीस नेपाल के सांसद संदीप राणा के लगातार संपर्क में थे और तीर्थयात्रियों की सुरक्षित वापसी के लिए जरूरी व्यवस्थाओं पर नजर रख रहे थे। एक तीर्थयात्री ने बताया कि वापसी के दौरान वे 28 अगस्त को बस से काठमांडो से बिहार के जनकपुर पहुंचे और अगले दिन दानापुर पहुंचे। इसके बाद वे

पटना गए, जहां से उन्होंने नागपुर के लिए ट्रेन पकड़ी। तीर्थयात्री दल का नेतृत्व कर रहे पंडित श्रीधर त्रिपाठी ने बताया कि दल की एक सदस्य 72

उन्होंने बताया कि उनका बेटा नागपुर से काठमांडो पहुंच गया है। इससे पहले शनिवार सुबह विदर्भ के चार तीर्थयात्री, जिनमें तीन महिलाएं शामिल थीं, सुरक्षित नागपुर लौट आए, जिससे

HOW AN INVESTOR SPOTTED A MISSING LAYER IN THE GLOBAL PRIVATE-MARKET INTELLIGENCE

DURING HIS DAYS as an associate at venture capital firm Accel, Abhishek Goyal encountered a problem that eventually became the starting point for Tracxn. Having helped lead the firm's first investment round in Flipkart in 2008, much of his work involved sourcing startups, researching markets and evaluating companies. The process meant spending hours pulling together information that was difficult to find in one place.

The gap was obvious when compared with public markets, where investors had access to platforms such as Bloomberg, Reuters and FactSet. Private-market investors had little equivalent infrastructure. "Public market investors had platforms like Bloomberg, Reuters, and FactSet, but private markets had nothing. The work was manual and inefficient," Goyal said. "Having lived that frustration every day, we saw the chance to build the infrastructure layer for private market intelligence.”

The idea kept resurfacing in conversations with Neha Singh, then an investment analyst at Sequoia Capital. Like Goyal, Singh had studied computer science and had moved into venture investing after college. Their experience gave them a view of the problem from inside the investment process, rather than as an abstract technology opportunity.

In 2013, the two left their jobs and founded Tracxn, with the initial idea of building a data intelligence platform for private markets. The company today provides data and research on private companies to investors, corporations and other institutions, covering everything from company profiles and funding to financial and industry data.

The decision to become entrepreneurs was not entirely unfamiliar territory for Goyal. “I grew up in a Marwari business family, so business and entrepreneurship were part of our everyday conversations at home," he said. But his own path had initially been more academic and technological. He secured a top-100 JEE rank in 1998, studied computer science at IIT Kanpur and subsequently worked at Yahoo! and Amazon. Those experiences, he said, shaped his thinking about innovation, long-term execution and building products at scale.

For Tracxn, however, the first product was built by staying close to prospective customers. Goyal and Singh showed early versions of the platform to potential users, gathered feedback and refined the offering. The launch itself was modest, but customer response came quickly. "We started reaching out to VCs to sell our offering and had a 100% win rate in the early days," Goyal said.

Their existing network also helped them raise the first money. The initial angel round came from founders and entrepreneurs with whom the two had previously worked, including Flipkart co-founders Sachin and Binny Bansal, Ratan Tata, Freshworks founder Girish Mathrubootham and Delhivery co-founder Sahil Barua.

That capital went into building the product, which in turn generated the first revenues. As the business scaled, venture capital investors began approaching Tracxn, eventually leading to its Series A round. The company's basic proposition, meanwhile, remained intact even as the product became increasingly technology-led and its datasets expanded.

The business is now at a very different scale, although growth has not been linear. In the first quarter of FY27, Tracxn's revenue from operations declined 0.6% year-on-year to ₹21.08 crore, while it reported a net loss of ₹3.01 crore compared with a net profit of ₹1.12 crore a year earlier. About 70% of its revenue now comes from outside India, with customers across more than 50 countries. The platform now tracks 64 million legal entities, 1.6 million companies with revenue data and 1.1 million companies with detailed financial statements.

The next phase is increasingly being shaped by artificial intelligence (AI). Tracxn has introduced a built-in chat interface through its AI Suite and is integrating its data into external AI tools through Model Context Protocol connectors for platforms including Claude and ChatGPT.

"AI can really simplify how customers interact with the platform," Goyal said. Instead of navigating multiple filters and databases, users can ask questions in natural language and receive relevant insights faster. The company also sees AI as a way to put its proprietary data directly into customers' existing workflows.

The technology is being applied internally as well. Goyal said Tracxn has increased its data coverage while reducing the team size and cost involved in producing that data. "Over time, technology will be a lever for three realms: improve user experience, create new revenue channels and drive greater operating efficiency."

Tracxn is also looking to expand its investment banking, corporate M&A and innovation and corporate sales businesses, while pushing products such as Stealth and Talent Signals in the US and Europe.

YUBARAJ GHIMIRE
Kathmandu, August 30

THE GOVERNMENT OF Nepal has decided to go for mass cremation amid a dearth of mortuary facilities in hospitals on one hand and recovery of bodies of flood victims in hundreds, on the other.

A day after 70 bodies were cremated en masse in Chitwan district, the Federal Home Ministry has decided to do the same in Kathmandu, the hub where bodies of victims of the devastating floods are being brought in from districts including Rasuwa, Nuwakot and Dhading.

An ice-rock avalanche following a glacial collapse near the Nepal-Tibet border sent a torrent of water, mud and debris downstream, wiping out towns and villages, damaging crucial infrastructure and washing away hydropower stations through northern and central Nepal on August 26.

The Nepal government has so far confirmed 752 deaths, with around 2,500 missing. The National Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Authority (NDRRMA) put the toll at 781, adding that at least 2,502 people are still missing, while 9,435 have been rescued from flood-hit areas so far.

The maximum number of bodies, around 250, have been recovered so far from Chitwan district. "We are going for mass burial, but will preserve DNA in case relatives want to perform rituals based on their traditions and religious practices," a government official said.

A woman carries a child in the aftermath of flash floods, at Trishuli market, in Nuwakot district, on Sunday.

Families, on Sunday, crowded hospitals searching for missing relatives as rescuers continued digging through mud and debris amid intermittent rainfall and renewed concerns over rising river levels.

Found alive

In a rescue operation at Timure border town, an Armed Police Force team searching the wreckage of a collapsed security post heard a child's cries. The Kathmandu Post newspaper reported that the rescuers dug through the debris and pulled out a six-year-old girl alive. The team had initially been unable to see anyone beneath the collapsed structure, but heard the child's crying while searching the site, said the report quoting a senior security official.

The girl was taken to the border outpost in Timure, but bad weather prevented her immediate evacuation to a hospital, the newspaper reported.

Hydro projects staff

As many as 537 workers and employees remained unaccounted for at nine hydropower projects in Nepal's flood-hit Rasuwa and Nuwakot districts, with rescue teams intensifying efforts to reach people believed trapped inside tunnels blocked by mud and debris. According to the Independent Power Producers' Association in Nepal (IPPAN), 898 workers and employees at nine hydropower projects in the two districts were initially reported out of contact following the August 26 floods. Of them, 361 have been rescued, leaving 537 still unaccounted for, according to local media reports that cited IPPAN.

At the May 27 meeting in Nepal's capital, 10 officials from Nepal and about a dozen from China, including the Tibet region where the disaster struck, discussed strengthening cooperation to monitor and respond to floods, weather and glacier-related hazards, according to an agenda prepared by the Nepali side and seen by Reuters.

The participants called for joint risk-reduction measures, including inventories of glacial

But two Nepali officials told Reuters they did not receive as much information as they wanted from China on glacier risks and water levels after the meeting and they feared insufficient data sharing could hamper their ability to anticipate and prepare for major disasters.

AS THOUSANDS OF teenagers prepare for their first day of higher education, the universities of Greenwich and Kent in southern England are taking their own step into the unknown.

The two mid-ranking institutions are merging into one of the UK's biggest, forging a blueprint for others in the economically challenged sector to follow. While both schools will continue under their individual names, the combination aims to create "greater economies of scale" and allow for a "centralizing of some services" under a restructuring that is still being drawn up.

The radical move, first discussed three years ago, is a sign of the times in a sector that is struggling to stave off a full-blown financial crisis.

"I do think there will be some failures in the sector if the government doesn't do anything," says Jane Harrington, chief executive officer of London and South East University Group — the merged Greenwich and Kent entity — told Bloomberg.

News. "They need to understand that the cost of a university failure will be far more than them providing some support."

Figures from trade body Universities UK suggest its members are facing a combined £3.7 billion funding hit by the end of the decade from government policy decisions, such as tighter immigration rules. While the top universities, including Oxford and Cambridge, are somewhat insulated from the crisis, many are in a more precarious position from declining international student income with the lowest ranked the most exposed, according to the Tony Blair Institute for Global Change.

Abhishek Goyal, Tracxn co-founder

THE PLATFORM NOW TRACKS 64 MILLION LEGAL ENTITIES, 1.6 MILLION COMPANIES WITH REVENUE DATA AND 1.1 MILLION COMPANIES WITH DETAILED FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

POULOMI CHATTERJEE

DURING HIS DAYS as an associate at venture capital firm Accel, Abhishek Goyal encountered a problem that eventually became the starting point for Tracxn. Having helped lead the firm's first investment round in Flipkart in 2008, much of his work involved sourcing startups, researching markets and evaluating companies. The process meant spending hours pulling together information that was difficult to find in one place.

The gap was obvious when compared with public markets, where investors had access to platforms such as Bloomberg, Reuters and FactSet. Private-market investors had little equivalent infrastructure. "Public market investors had platforms like Bloomberg, Reuters, and FactSet, but private markets had nothing. The work was manual and inefficient," Goyal said. "Having lived that frustra-

The idea kept resurfacing in conversations with Neha Singh, then an investment analyst at Sequoia Capital. Like Goyal, Singh had studied computer science and had moved into venture investing after college. Their experience gave them a view of the problem from inside the investment process, rather than as an abstract technology opportunity.

In 2013, the two left their jobs and founded Tracxn, with the initial idea of building a data intelligence platform for private markets. The company today provides data and research on private companies to investors, corporations and other institutions, covering everything from company profiles and funding to financial and industry data.

The decision to become entrepreneurs was not entirely unfamiliar territory for Goyal. “I grew up in a Marwari business family, so business and entrepreneurship were part of our everyday conversations at home," he said. But his own path had initially been more academic and technological. He secured a top-100 JEE rank in 1998, studied computer science at IIT Kanpur and subsequently worked at Yahoo! and Amazon. Those experiences, he said, shaped his thinking about innovation, long-term execution and building products at scale.

For Tracxn, however, the first product was built by staying close to prospective customers. Goyal and Singh showed early versions of the platform to potential users, gathered feedback and refined the offering. The launch itself was modest, but customer response came quickly. "We started reaching out to VCs to sell our offering and had a 100% win rate in the early days," Goyal said.

Their existing network also helped them raise the first money. The initial angel round came from founders and entrepreneurs with whom the two had previously worked, including Flipkart co-founders Sachin and Binny Bansal, Ratan Tata, Freshworks founder Girish Mathrubootham and Delhivery co-founder Sahil Barua.

That capital went into building the product, which in turn generated the first revenues. As the business scaled, venture capital investors began approaching Tracxn, eventually leading to its Series A round. The company's basic proposition, meanwhile, remained intact even as the product became increasingly technology-led and its datasets expanded.

The business is now at a very different scale, although growth has not been linear. In the first quarter of FY27, Tracxn's revenue from operations declined 0.6% year-on-year to ₹21.08 crore, while it reported a net loss of ₹3.01 crore compared with a net profit of ₹1.12 crore a year earlier. About 70% of its revenue now comes from outside India, with customers across more than 50 countries. The platform now tracks 64 million legal entities, 1.6 million companies with revenue data and 1.1 million companies with detailed financial statements.

The next phase is increasingly being shaped by artificial intelligence (AI). Tracxn has introduced a built-in chat interface through its AI Suite and is integrating its data into external AI tools through Model Context Protocol connectors for platforms including Claude and ChatGPT.

Flood toll nears 800 as Nepal prepares for mass cremation

YUBARAJ GHIMIRE
Kathmandu, August 30

THE GOVERNMENT OF Nepal has decided to go for mass cremation amid a dearth of mortuary facilities in hospitals on one hand and recovery of bodies of flood victims in hundreds, on the other.

A day after 70 bodies were cremated en masse in Chitwan district, the Federal Home Ministry has decided to do the same in Kathmandu, the hub where bodies of victims of the devastating floods are being brought in from districts including Rasuwa, Nuwakot and Dhading.

An ice-rock avalanche following a glacial collapse near the Nepal-Tibet border sent a torrent of water, mud and debris downstream, wiping out towns and villages, damaging crucial infrastructure and washing away hydropower stations through northern and central Nepal on August 26.

Families, on Sunday, crowded hospitals searching for missing relatives as rescuers continued digging through mud and debris amid intermittent rainfall and renewed concerns over rising river levels.

As many as 537 workers and employees remained unaccounted for at nine hydropower projects in Nepal's flood-hit Rasuwa and Nuwakot districts, with rescue teams intensifying efforts to reach people believed trapped inside tunnels blocked by mud and debris. According to the Independent Power Producers' Association in Nepal (IPPAN), 898 workers and employees at nine hydropower projects in the two districts were initially reported out of contact following the August 26 floods. Of them, 361 have been rescued, leaving 537 still unaccounted for, according to local media reports that cited IPPAN.

In a rescue operation at Timire border town, an Armed Police Force team searching the wreckage of a collapsed structure post heard a child's cries. The Kathmandu Post newspaper reported that the rescuers dug through the debris and pulled out a six-year-old girl alive. The team had initially been unable to see anyone beneath the collapsed structure, but heard the child's crying while searching the site, said the report quoting a senior security official.

Now, Britain's universities bet more on foreign students

AS THOUSANDS OF teenagers prepare for their first day of higher education, the universities of Greenwich and Kent in southern England are taking their own step into the unknown.

The two mid-ranking institutions are merging into one of the UK's biggest, forging a blueprint for others in the economically challenged sector to follow. While both schools will continue under their individual names, the combination aims to create "greater economies of scale" and allow for a "centralizing of some services" under a restructuring that is still being drawn up.

The radical move, first discussed three years ago, is a sign of the times in a sector that is struggling to stave off a full-blown financial crisis.

"I do think there will be some failures in the sector if the government doesn't do anything," says Jane Harrington, chief executive officer of London and South East University Group — the merged Greenwich and Kent entity — told Bloomberg.

News. "They need to understand that the cost of a university failing will be far more than them providing some support"

Figures from trade body Universities UK suggest its members are facing a combined £3.7 billion funding hit by the end of the decade from government policy decisions, such as tighter immigration rules. While the

top universities, including Oxford and Cambridge, are somewhat insulated from the crisis, many are in a more precarious position from declining international student income with the lowest ranked the most exposed, according to the Tony Blair Institute for Global Change.

The radical move, first discussed three years ago, is a sign of the times in a sector that is struggling to stave off a full-blown financial crisis.

"I do think there will be some failures in the sector if the government doesn't do anything," says Jane Harrington, chief executive officer of London and South East University Group — the merged Greenwich and Kent entity — told Bloomberg.

News. "They need to understand that the cost of a university failing will be far more than them providing some support"

THE BIG IDEA

The data GAP

POULOMI CHATTERJEE

DURING HIS DAYS as an associate at venture capital firm Accel, Abhishek Goyal encountered a problem that eventually became the starting point for Tracxn. Having helped lead the firm's first investment round in Flipkart in 2008, much of his work involved sourcing startups, researching markets and evaluating companies. The process meant spending hours pulling together information that was difficult to find in one place. The gap was obvious when compared with public markets, where investors had access to platforms such as Bloomberg, Reuters and FactSet. Private-market investors had little equivalent infrastructure. "Public market investors had platforms like Bloomberg, Reuters, and FactSet, but private markets had nothing. The work was manual and inefficient," Goyal said. "Having lived that frustration every day, we saw the chance to build the infrastructure layer for private market intelligence." The idea kept resurfacing in conversations with Neha Singh, then an investment analyst at Sequoia Capital. Like Goyal, Singh had studied computer science and had moved into venture investing after college. Their experience gave them a view of the problem from inside the investment process, rather than as an abstract technology opportunity. In 2013, the two left their jobs and founded Tracxn, with the initial idea of building a data intelligence platform for private markets. The company today provides data and research on private companies to investors, corporations and other institutions, covering everything from company profiles and funding to financial and industry data. The decision to become entrepreneurs was not entirely unfamiliar territory for Goyal. "I grew up in a Marwari business family, so business and entrepreneurship were part of our everyday conversations at home," he said. But his own path had initially been more academic and technological. He secured a top-100 JEE rank in 1998, studied computer science at IIT Kanpur and subsequently worked at Yahoo! and Amazon. Those experiences, he said, shaped his thinking about innovation, long-term execution and building products at scale. For Tracxn, however, the first product was built by staying close to prospective customers. Goyal and Singh showed early versions of the platform to potential users, gathered feedback and refined the offering. The launch itself was modest, but customer response came quickly. "We started reaching out to VCs to sell our

became increasingly technology-led and its datasets expanded. The business is now at a very different scale, although growth has not been linear. In the first quarter of FY27, Tracxn's revenue from operations declined 0.6% year-on-year to ₹21.08 crore, while it reported a net loss of ₹3.01 crore compared with a net profit of ₹1.12 crore a year earlier. About 70% of its revenue now comes from outside India, with customers across more than 50 countries. The platform now tracks 64 million legal entities, 1.6 million companies with revenue data and 1.1 million companies with detailed financial statements. The next phase is increasingly being shaped by artificial intelligence (AI). Tracxn has introduced a built-in chat interface through its AI Suite and is integrating its data into external AI tools through Model Context Protocol connectors for platforms including Claude and ChatGPT. "AI can really simplify how customers interact with the platform," Goyal said. Instead of navigating multiple filters and databases, users can ask questions in natural language and receive relevant insights faster. The company also sees AI as a way to put its proprietary data directly into customers' existing workflows. The technology is being applied internally as well. Goyal said Tracxn has increased its data coverage while reducing the team size and cost involved in producing that data. "Over time, technology will be a lever for three realms: improve user experience, create new revenue channels and drive greater operating efficiency." Tracxn is also looking to expand its investment banking, corporate M&A and innovation and corporate sales businesses, while pushing products such as Stealth and Talent Signals in the US and Europe.

Flood toll nears 800 as Nepal prepares for mass cremation

YUBARAJ GHIMIRE
Kathmandu, August 30

THE GOVERNMENT OF Nepal has decided to go for mass cremation amid a dearth of mortuary facilities in hospitals on one hand and recovery of bodies of flood victims in hundreds, on the other. A day after 70 bodies were cremated en masse in Chitwan district, the Federal Home Ministry has decided to do the same in Kathmandu, the hub where bodies of victims of the devastating floods are being brought in from districts including Rasuwa, Nuwakot and Dhading. An ice-rock avalanche following a glacial collapse near the Nepal-Tibet border sent a torrent of water, mud and debris downstream, wiping out towns and villages, damaging crucial infrastructure and washing away hydropower stations through northern and central Nepal on August 26. The Nepal government has so far confirmed 752 deaths, with around 2,500 missing. The National Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Authority (NDRRMA) put the toll at 781, adding that at least 2,502 people are still missing, while 9,435 have been rescued from flood-hit areas so far. The maximum number of bodies, around 250, have been recovered so far from Chitwan district. "We are going for mass burial, but will preserve DNA in case relatives want to perform rituals based on their traditions and religious practices," a government official said.

A woman carries a child in the aftermath of flash floods, at Trishuli market, in Nuwakot district, on Sunday.

Families, on Sunday, crowded hospitals searching for missing relatives as rescuers continued digging through mud and debris amid intermittent rainfall and renewed concerns over rising river levels.

Found alive

In a rescue operation at Timure border town, an Armed Police Force team searching the wreckage of a collapsed security post heard a child's cries. The Kathmandu Post newspaper reported that the rescuers dug through the debris and pulled out a six-year-old girl alive. The team had initially been unable to see anyone beneath the collapsed structure, but heard the child's crying while searching the site, said the report quoting a senior security official. The girl was taken to the border outpost in Timure, but bad weather prevented her immediate evacuation to a hospital, the newspaper reported.

Hydro projects staff

As many as 537 workers and employees remained unaccounted for at nine hydropower projects in Nepal's flood-hit Rasuwa and Nuwakot districts, with rescue teams intensifying efforts to reach people believed trapped inside tunnels blocked by mud and debris. According to the Independent Power Producers' Association in Nepal (IPPAN), 898 workers and employees at nine hydropower projects in the two districts were initially reported out of contact following the August 26 floods. Of them, 361 have been rescued, leaving 537 still unaccounted for, according to local media reports that cited IPPAN.

Before flood catastrophe, Nepal asked China for early warnings

Nepal sought data access from China when scientists met in May; China says it has shared information in a 'timely manner'

THREE MONTHS BEFORE a wall of water, mud and rock killed hundreds when it hurtled down a Himalayan valley bordering Nepal and China, experts and officials from both countries met in Kathmandu to discuss the risk of such disasters. At the May 27 meeting in Nepal's capital, 10 officials from Nepal and about a dozen from China, including the Tibet region where the disaster struck, discussed strengthening cooperation to monitor and respond to floods, weather and glacier-related hazards, according to an agenda prepared by the Nepali side and seen by Reuters. The participants called for joint risk-reduction measures, including inventories of glacial

there are early movements of glaciers and early movements around that area, we would want to know a bit early," said Sauharda Joshi, a hydrologist at Nepal's Flood Forecasting Division, who was in the May meeting. No officials or experts have blamed either side for the natural disaster, which will cost an estimated tenth of Nepal's annual economic output to recover from. Nepali officials say the priority is to deepen cooperation with China. China's foreign ministry did not respond to a request for comment on whether the May meeting or on Nepal's request for additional information sharing.

AS THOUSANDS OF teenagers prepare for their first day of higher education, the universities of Greenwich and Kent in southern England are taking their own step into the unknown. The two mid-ranking institutions are merging into one of the UK's biggest, forging a blueprint for others in the economically challenged sector to follow. While both schools will continue under their individual names, the combination aims to create "greater economies of scale" and allow for a "centralizing of some services" under a restructuring that is still being drawn up. The radical move, first discussed three years ago, is a sign of the times in a sector that is struggling to stave off a full-blown financial crisis. THE BIG IDEA

TRACXN

The data GAP

POULOMI CHATTERJEE

DURING HIS DAYS as an associate at venture capital firm Accel, Abhishek Goyal encountered a problem that eventually became the starting point for Tracxn. Having helped lead the firm's first investment round in Flipkart in 2008, much of his work involved sourcing startups, researching markets and evaluating companies. The process meant spending hours pulling together information that was difficult to find in one place. The gap was obvious when compared with public markets, where investors had access to platforms such as Bloomberg, Reuters and FactSet. Private-market investors had little equivalent infrastructure. "Public market investors had platforms like Bloomberg, Reuters, and FactSet, but private markets had nothing. The work was manual and inefficient," Goyal said. "Having lived that frustration every day, we saw the chance to build the infrastructure layer for private market intelligence." The idea kept resurfacing in conversations with Neha Singh, then an investment analyst at Sequoia Capital. Like Goyal, Singh had studied computer science and had moved into venture investing after college. Their experience gave them a view of the problem from inside the investment process, rather than as an abstract technology opportunity. In 2013, the two left their jobs and founded Tracxn, with the initial idea of building a data intelligence platform for private markets. The company today provides data and research on private companies to investors, corporations and other institutions, covering everything from company profiles and funding to financial and industry data. The decision to become entrepreneurs was not entirely unfamiliar territory for Goyal. "I grew up in a Marwari business family, so business and entrepreneurship were part of our everyday conversations at home," he said. But his own path had initially been more academic and technological. He secured a top-100 JEE rank in 1998, studied computer science at IIT Kanpur and subsequently worked at Yahoo! and Amazon. Those experiences, he said, shaped his thinking about innovation, long-term execution and building products at scale. For Tracxn, however, the first product was built by staying close to prospective customers. Goyal and Singh showed early versions of the platform to potential users, gathered feedback and refined the offering. The launch itself was modest, but customer response came quickly. "We started reaching out to VCs to sell our

became increasingly technology-led and its datasets expanded. The business is now at a very different scale, although growth has not been linear. In the first quarter of FY27, Tracxn's revenue from operations declined 0.6% year-on-year to ₹21.08 crore, while it reported a net loss of ₹3.01 crore compared with a net profit of ₹1.12 crore a year earlier. About 70% of its revenue now comes from outside India, with customers across more than 50 countries. The platform now tracks 64 million legal entities, 1.6 million companies with revenue data and 1.1 million companies with detailed financial statements. The next phase is increasingly being shaped by artificial intelligence (AI). Tracxn has introduced a built-in chat interface through its AI Suite and is integrating its data into external AI tools through Model Context Protocol connectors for platforms including Claude and ChatGPT.

"AI can really simplify how customers interact with the platform," Goyal said. Instead of navigating multiple filters and databases, users can ask questions in natural language and receive relevant insights faster. The company also sees AI as a way to put its proprietary data directly into customers' existing workflows. The technology is being applied internally as well. Goyal said Tracxn has increased its data coverage while reducing the team size and cost involved in producing that data. "Over time, technology will be a lever for three realms: improve user experience, create new revenue channels and drive greater operating efficiency." Tracxn is also looking to expand its investment banking, corporate M&A and innovation and corporate sales businesses, while pushing products such as Stealth and Talent Signals in the US and Europe.

Flood toll nears 800 as Nepal prepares for mass cremation

YUBARAJ GHIMIRE
Kathmandu, August 30

THE GOVERNMENT OF Nepal has decided to go for mass cremation amid a dearth of mortuary facilities in hospitals on one hand and recovery of bodies of flood victims in hundreds, on the other. A day after 70 bodies were cremated en masse in Chitwan district, the Federal Home Ministry has decided to do the same in Kathmandu, the hub where bodies of victims of the devastating floods are being brought in from districts including Rasuwa, Nuwakot and Dhading. An ice-rock avalanche following a glacial collapse near the Nepal-Tibet border sent a torrent of water, mud and debris downstream, wiping out towns and villages, damaging crucial infrastructure and washing away hydropower stations through northern and central Nepal on August 26.

The Nepal government has so far confirmed 752 deaths, with around 2,500 missing. The National Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Authority (NDRRMA) put the toll at 781, adding that at least 2,502 people are still missing, while 9,435 have been rescued from flood-hit areas so far. The maximum number of bodies, around 250, have been recovered so far from Chitwan district. "We are going for mass burial, but will preserve DNA in case relatives want to perform rituals based on their traditions and religious practices," a government official said.

A woman carries a child in the aftermath of flash floods, at Trishuli market, in Nuwakot district, on Sunday.

Families, on Sunday, crowded hospitals searching for missing relatives as rescuers continued digging through mud and debris amid intermittent rainfall and renewed concerns over rising river levels.

Found alive

In a rescue operation at Timure border town, an Armed Police Force team searching the wreckage of a collapsed security post heard a child's cries. The Kathmandu Post newspaper reported that the rescuers dug through the debris and pulled out a six-year-old girl alive. The team had initially been unable to see anyone beneath the collapsed structure, but heard the child's crying while searching the site, said the report quoting a senior security official. The girl was taken to the border outpost in Timure, but bad weather prevented her immediate evacuation to a hospital, the newspaper reported.

Hydro projects staff

As many as 537 workers and employees remained unaccounted for at nine hydropower projects in Nepal's flood-hit Rasuwa and Nuwakot districts, with rescue teams intensifying efforts to reach people believed trapped inside tunnels blocked by mud and debris. According to the Independent Power Producers' Association in Nepal (IPPAN), 898 workers and employees at nine hydropower projects in the two districts were initially reported out of contact following the August 26 floods. Of them, 361 have been rescued, leaving 537 still unaccounted for, according to local media reports that cited IPPAN.

Before flood catastrophe, Nepal asked China for early warnings

Nepal sought data access from China when scientists met in May; China says it has shared information in a 'timely manner'

THREE MONTHS BEFORE a wall of water, mud and rock killed hundreds when it hurtled down a Himalayan valley bordering Nepal and China, experts and officials from both countries met in Kathmandu to discuss the risk of such disasters. At the May 27 meeting in Nepal's capital, 10 officials from Nepal and about a dozen from China, including the Tibet region where the disaster struck, discussed strengthening cooperation to monitor and respond to floods, weather and glacier-related hazards, according to an agenda prepared by the Nepali side and seen by Reuters. The participants called for joint risk-reduction measures, including inventories of glacial

there are early movements of glaciers and early movements around that area, we would want to know a bit early," said Sauharda Joshi, a hydrologist at Nepal's Flood Forecasting Division, who was in the May meeting. No officials or experts have blamed either side for the natural disaster, which will cost an estimated tenth of Nepal's annual economic output to recover from. Nepali officials say the priority is to deepen cooperation with China. China's foreign ministry did not respond to a request for comment on the May meeting or on Nepal's request for additional information sharing.

AS THOUSANDS OF teenagers prepare for their first day of higher education, the universities of Greenwich and Kent in southern England are taking their own step into the unknown. The two mid-ranking institutions are merging into one of the UK's biggest, forging a blueprint for others in the economically challenged sector to follow. While both schools will continue under their individual names, the combination aims to create "greater economies of scale" and allow for a "centralizing of some services" under a restructuring that is still being drawn up. The radical move, first discussed three years ago, is a sign of the times in a sector that is struggling to stave off a full-blown financial crisis. "I do think there will be some failures in the sector if the government doesn't do anything," says Jane Harrington, chief executive officer of London and South East University Group — the merged Greenwich and Kent entity — told Bloomberg

News. "They need to understand that the cost of a university failing will be far more than them providing some support." Figures from trade body Universities UK suggest its members are facing a combined £3.7 billion funding hit by the end of the decade from government policy decisions, such as tighter immigration rules. While the top universities, including Oxford and Cambridge, are somewhat insulated from the crisis, many are in a more precarious position from declining international student income with the lowest ranked the most exposed, according to the Tony Blair Institute for Global Change.

THE BIG IDEA

The data GAP

POULOMI CHATTERJEE

DURING HIS DAYS as an associate at venture capital firm Accel, Abhishek Goyal encountered a problem that eventually became the starting point for Tracxn. Having helped lead the firm's first investment round in Flipkart in 2008, much of his work involved sourcing startups, researching markets and evaluating companies. The process meant spending hours pulling together information that was difficult to find in one place. The gap was obvious when compared with public markets, where investors had access to platforms such as Bloomberg, Reuters and FactSet. Private-market investors had little equivalent infrastructure. "Public market investors had platforms like Bloomberg, Reuters, and FactSet, but private markets had nothing. The work was manual and inefficient," Goyal said. "Having lived that frustration every day, we saw the chance to build the infrastructure layer for private market intelligence." The idea kept resurfacing in conversations with Neha Singh, then an investment analyst at Sequoia Capital. Like Goyal, Singh had studied computer science and had moved into venture investing after college. Their experience gave them a view of the problem from inside the investment process, rather than as an abstract technology opportunity. In 2013, the two left their jobs and founded Tracxn, with the initial idea of building a data intelligence platform for private markets. The company today provides data and research on private companies to investors, corporations and other institutions, covering everything from company profiles and funding to financial and industry data. The decision to become entrepreneurs was not entirely unfamiliar territory for Goyal. "I grew up in a Marwari business family, so business and entrepreneur-

He secured a top-100 JEE rank in 1998, studied computer science at IIT Kanpur and subsequently worked at Yahoo! and Amazon. Those experiences, he said, shaped his thinking about innovation, long-term execution and building products at scale. became increasingly technology-led and its datasets expanded. The business is now at a very different scale, although growth has not been linear. In the first quarter of FY27, Tracxn's revenue from operations declined 0.6% year-on-year to ₹21.08 crore, while it reported a net loss of ₹3.01 crore compared with a net profit of ₹1.12 crore a year earlier. About 70% of its revenue now comes from outside India, with customers across more than 50 countries. The platform now tracks 64 million legal entities, 1.6 million companies with revenue data and 1.1 million companies with detailed financial statements. The next phase is increasingly being shaped by artificial intelligence (AI). Tracxn has introduced a built-in chat interface through its AI Suite and is integrating its data into external AI tools through Model Context Protocol connectors for platforms including Claude and ChatGPT.

"AI can really simplify how customers interact with the platform," Goyal said. Instead of navigating multiple filters and databases, users can ask questions in natural language and receive relevant insights faster. The company also sees AI as a way to put its proprietary data directly into customers' existing workflows. The technology is being applied internally as well. Goyal said Tracxn has increased its data coverage while reducing the team size and cost involved in producing that data. "Over time, technology will be a lever for three realms: improve user experience, create new revenue channels and drive greater operating efficiency." Tracxn is also looking to expand its investment banking, corporate M&A and innovation and corporate sales businesses, while pushing products such as Stealth and Talent Signals in the US and Europe.

Flood toll nears 800 as Nepal prepares for mass cremation

YUBARAJ GHIMIRE
Kathmandu, August 30

THE GOVERNMENT OF Nepal has decided to go for mass cremation amid a dearth of mortuary facilities in hospitals on one hand and recovery of bodies of flood victims in hundreds, on the other. A day after 70 bodies were cremated en masse in Chitwan district, the Federal Home Ministry has decided to do the same in Kathmandu, the hub where bodies of victims of the devastating floods are being brought in from districts including Rasuwa, Nuwakot and Dhading. An ice-rock avalanche following a glacial collapse near the Nepal-Tibet border sent a torrent of water, mud and debris downstream, wiping out towns and villages, damaging crucial infrastructure and washing away hydropower stations through northern and central Nepal on August 26.

The Nepal government has so far confirmed 752 deaths, with around 2,500 missing. The National Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Authority (NDRRMA) put the toll at 781, adding that at least 2,502 people are still missing, while 9,435 have been rescued from flood-hit areas so far. The maximum number of bodies, around 250, have been recovered so far from Chitwan district. "We are going for mass burial, but will preserve DNA in case relatives want to perform rituals based on their traditions and religious practices," a government official said.

A woman carries a child in the aftermath of flash floods, at Trishuli market, in Nuwakot district, on Sunday.

Families, on Sunday, crowded hospitals searching for missing relatives as rescuers continued digging through mud and debris amid intermittent rainfall and renewed concerns over rising river levels.

Found alive

In a rescue operation at Timure border town, an Armed Police Force team searching the wreckage of a collapsed security post heard a child's cries. The Kathmandu Post newspaper reported that the rescuers dug through the debris and pulled out a six-year-old girl alive. The team had initially been unable to see anyone beneath the collapsed structure, but heard the child's crying while searching the site, said the report quoting a senior security official. The girl was taken to the border outpost in Timure, but bad weather prevented her immediate evacuation to a hospital, the newspaper reported.

Hydro projects staff

As many as 537 workers and employees remained unaccounted for at nine hydropower projects in Nepal's flood-hit Rasuwa and Nuwakot districts, with rescue teams intensifying efforts to reach people believed trapped inside tunnels blocked by mud and debris. According to the Independent Power Producers' Association in Nepal (IPPAN), 898 workers and employees at nine hydropower projects in the two districts were initially reported out of contact following the August 26 floods. Of them, 361 have been rescued, leaving 537 still unaccounted for, according to local media reports that cited IPPAN.

Before flood catastrophe, Nepal asked China for early warnings

Nepal sought data access from China when scientists met in May; China says it has shared information in a 'timely manner'

THREE MONTHS BEFORE a wall of water, mud and rock killed hundreds when it hurtled down a Himalayan valley bordering Nepal and China, experts and officials from both countries met in Kathmandu to discuss the risk of such disasters. At the May 27 meeting in Nepal's capital, 10 officials from Nepal and about a dozen from China, including the Tibet region where the disaster struck, discussed strengthening cooperation to monitor and respond to floods, weather and glacier-related hazards, according to an agenda prepared by the Nepali side and seen by Reuters. The participants called for joint risk-reduction measures, including inventories of glacial

there are early movements of glaciers and early movements around that area, we would want to know a bit early," said Sauharda Joshi, a hydrologist at Nepal's Flood Forecasting Division, who was in the May meeting. No officials or experts have blamed either side for the natural disaster, which will cost an estimated tenth of Nepal's annual economic output to recover from. Nepali officials say the priority is to deepen cooperation with China. China's foreign ministry did not respond to a request for comment on the May meeting or on Nepal's request for additional information sharing.

AS THOUSANDS OF teenagers prepare for their first day of higher education, the universities of Greenwich and Kent in southern England are taking their own step into the unknown. The two mid-ranking institutions are merging into one of the UK's biggest, forging a blueprint for others in the economically challenged sector to follow. While both schools will continue under their individual names, the combination aims to create "greater economies of scale" and allow for a "centralizing of some services" under a restructuring that is still being drawn up. The radical move, first discussed three years ago, is a sign of the times in a sector that is struggling to stave off a full-blown financial crisis. "I do think there will be some failures in the sector if the government doesn't do anything," says Jane Harrington, chief executive officer of London and South East University Group — the merged Greenwich and Kent entity — told Bloomberg

News. "They need to understand that the cost of a university failing will be far more than them providing some support." Figures from trade body Universities UK suggest its members are facing a combined £3.7 billion funding hit by the end of the decade from government policy decisions, such as tighter immigration rules. While the top universities, including Oxford and Cambridge, are somewhat insulated from the crisis, many are in a more precarious position from declining international student income with the lowest ranked the most exposed, according to the Tony Blair Institute for Global Change.

Flood toll nears 800 as Nepal prepares for mass cremation

YUBARAJ GHIMIRE
Kathmandu, August 30

THE GOVERNMENT OF Nepal has decided to go for mass cremation amid a dearth of mortuary facilities in hospitals on one hand and recovery of bodies of flood victims in hundreds, on the other. A day after 70 bodies were cremated in masse in Chitwan district, the Federal Home Ministry has decided to do the same in Kathmandu, the hub where bodies of victims of the devastating floods are being brought in from districts including Rasuwa, Nuwakot and Dhading. An ice-rock avalanche following a glacial collapse near the Nepal-Tibet border sent a torrent of water, mud and debris downstream, wiping out towns and villages, damaging crucial infrastructure and washing away hydropower stations through northern and central Nepal on August 26.

In a rescue operation at Timure border town, an Armed Police Force team searching the wreckage of a collapsed security post heard of a child's cries. The Kathmandu Post newspaper reported that the rescuers dug through the debris and pulled out a six-year-old girl alive. The team had initially been unable to see anyone beneath the collapsed structure, but heard the child's crying while searching the site, said the report quoting a senior security official. The girl was taken to the border town in Timure, but bad weather prevented her immediate evacuation to a hospital, the newspaper reported.

Hydro projects staff

As many as 537 workers and employees remained unaccounted for at nine hydropower projects in Nepal's flood-hit Rasuwa and Nuwakot districts, with rescue teams intensifying efforts to reach people believed trapped inside tunnels blocked by mud and debris. According to the Independent Power Producers' Association in Nepal (IPPAN), 898 workers and employees at nine hydropower projects in the two districts were initially reported out of contact following the August 26 floods. Of them, 361 have been rescued, leaving 537 still unaccounted for, according to local media reports that cited IPPAN.

Before flood catastrophe, Nepal asked China for early warnings

Nepal sought data access from China when scientists met in May; China says it has shared information in a 'timely manner'

THREE MONTHS BEFORE a wall of water, mud and rock killed hundreds when it hurtled down a Himalayan valley bordering Nepal and China, experts and officials from both countries met in Kathmandu to discuss the risk of such disasters. At the May 27 meeting in Nepal's capital, 10 officials from Nepal and about a dozen from China, including the Tibet region where the disaster struck, discussed strengthening cooperation to monitor and respond to floods, weather and glacier-related hazards, according to an agenda prepared by the Nepali side and seen by Reuters. The participants called for joint risk-reduction measures, including inventories of glacial lakes and hazard mapping. But two Nepali officials told Reuters they did not receive as much information as they wanted from China on glacier risks and water levels after the meeting and they feared insufficient data sharing could hamper their ability to anticipate and prepare for major disasters. "What we actually wanted from them, and still want, is if there are early movements of glaciers and early movements around that area, we would want to know a bit early," said Sauhardra Joshi, a hydrologist at Nepal's Flood Forecasting Division, who was in the May meeting. No officials or experts have blamed either side for the natural disaster, which will cost an estimated tenth of Nepal's annual economic output to recover from. Nepali officials say the priority is to deepen cooperation with China. China's foreign ministry did not respond to a Reuters request for comment on the May meeting or on Nepal's request for additional information sharing. REUTERS

AS THOUSANDS OF teenagers prepare for their first day of higher education, the universities of Greenwich and Kent in southern England are taking their own step into the unknown. The two mid-ranking institutions are merging into one of the UK's biggest, forging a blueprint for others in the economically challenged sector to follow. While both schools will continue under their individual names, the combination aims to create "greater economies of scale" and allow for a "centralizing of some services" under a restructuring that is still being drawn up. The radical move, first discussed three years ago, is a sign of the times in a sector that is struggling to stave off a full-blown financial crisis. "I do think there will be some failures in the sector if the government doesn't do anything," says Jane Harrington, chief executive officer of London and South East University Group — the merged Greenwich and Kent entity — told Bloomberg

News. "They need to understand that the cost of a university failing will be far more than them providing some support." Figures from trade body Universities UK suggest its members are facing a combined £3.7 billion funding hit by the end of the decade from government policy decisions, such as tighter immigration rules. While the top universities, including Oxford and Cambridge, are somewhat insulated from the crisis, many are in a more precarious position from declining international student income with the lowest ranked the most exposed, according to the Tony Blair Institute for Global Change. —BLOOMBERG
