Low-income groups may drive branded sugar demand by '30

Institutional consumption dominated India's sugar demand at 60-65% in 2023-24, says Isma report

SANJEEV MUKHERJEE
New Delhi, 12 September

Even as India's overall sugar consumption is projected to grow at a modest rate of 1.5-2 per cent per annum from the 2024-25 to 2029-30 season, people in the low-income categories are likely to show higher consumption growth in branded refined sugar compared to those in the high- and medium-income groups, a recent study by the Indian Sugar and Bio-Energy Manufacturers Association (Isma) has found. The sugar season runs from October to September.

The demand growth in the low-income category is expected to be driven mainly by packaged branded sugar as well as traditionally consumed gur (jaggery) and khandasari, which have a cultural preference as well, the study found. The Isma study classified high-income groups as households with average annual per capita income of $15,000 or more. It said there are 30 million households that would fall in this category while low-income groups are expected to be those who have an average annual per capita income of $1,000 or less, comprising around 205 million households. It said middle-income groups — comprising around 70 million households that have an annual per capita income of $3,000 — maintain high refined sugar use in daily consumption, and stable gur and khandasari usage. However, they are showing slow uptake of other sweeteners, with expected gradual growth in branded sugar and shifting consumer preferences by 2030. Isma said it prepared the report titled Sweetening The Future: A study on Sugar Consumption in India based on in-depth interactions with more than 30 industry experts, including C-suite executives, procurement heads, ingredient advisors, R&D directors, group product managers, and category sales leads across segments. The report was released by Food Minister Pralhad Joshi and Transport Minister Nitin Gadkari at the annual Indian Sugar and Bio-Energy Conference in New Delhi on Thursday evening. The report, meanwhile, also said that institutional consumption now dominates India's sugar demand, comprising 60-65 per cent in 2023-24 sugar season, up from 50-55 per cent in sugar season 2018-19, with retail accounting for the balance 35-40 per cent of the total demand. Within institutional consumers, non-alcoholic beverages (35-40 per cent) and confectionery (15-18 per cent) are the largest segments, followed by bakery and biscuits, dairy and ice cream, HoReCa, pharma/nutraceuticals, and other processed foods. HoReCa stands for hotel, restaurant, and catering. "Sugar holds the largest share in sweetener usage (more than 85 per cent retail, and 97 per cent institutional), with jaggery/khandasari (10-13 per cent retail, and 1-2 per cent institutional) and other natural/artificial sweeteners making up the remainder," the report said. It said institutional sugar consumption is expected to maintain dominance, with retail consumption showing relatively flat growth amid health trends and diabetes awareness.

SUDHA TILAK

Decluttering has been a global obsession ever since Marie Kondo told us to keep only what sparks joy. Closets were emptied, storage boxes sold out, and minimalism became a lifestyle. But what if India already had its own wisdom traditions around order, balance, and mindful living, long before tidying up became a trend? That's the proposition in Bhawana Pingali's book that looks inward to find solace in nine rituals, grumpy practices, and crafts that modernity pushed aside. At the heart of Pingali's work is the concept of shaucha, or cleanliness, as understood in Indian philosophy. Not just scrubbing surfaces, but a deeper purification of body, mind, emotions, and spirit. Decluttering, she argues, is about freeing our senses from overload, creating space for mindfulness, and reconnecting with ecological rhythms.

The book spotlights forgotten practices that reveal how Indian homes once embodied sustainability and balance. Mustard seed pillows that ease the body and offer better sleep for infants and adults, squatting toilets that align the spine, and cotton sanitary cloths handmade by mothers all make an appearance. Far from nostalgia, Pingali suggests these embodied wisdoms, erased by a generation that sought westernised practices, but remain valuable in an age of disposable living.

Her Telugu and Odia mixed heritage adds cultural texture as she goes about re-learning practices from her foremothers. She writes about muggu in Telugu for elegant mathematical designs drawn daily with rice flour at the doorstep. These patterns, also known as rangoli, kolam or alpona elsewhere, are both meditative and ecological: They feed ants and birds, vanish with the morning wash, and are redrawn anew. Each design is a fleeting gesture, reminding us of impermanence and the quiet beauty of daily ritual.

Clothing, too, gets reimagined. Against the tide of fast fashion, Pingali restores dignity to the acts of mending and repurposing. She highlights the skill of ruffagers, traditional darning women whose work was once prized, and recalls her grandmother's bifurcated sari, a drape adapted to practicality. Stitching, knitting, quilting, or kantha embroidery are framed not only as hand skills but as emotional therapies, sisterhood practices that strengthen connections.

In her family's Odia home, evenings meant lighting jhuna resin. Across India, incense or ritual scents are burnt as a way to shift energy at decluttering. For Pingali, these are sensory resets that aid in decluttering the atmosphere of the home. Even something as simple as walking barefoot becomes an act of grounding, reconnecting body and earth.

Unlike prescriptive self-help manuals, Pingali does not offer a rigid method. Instead, each section ends with suggestions on how to adapt rituals today: a simple rice flour design as a morning mindfulness practice, an evening incense ritual, or learning to darn an old shirt instead of discarding it. The reader is encouraged to find their own rituals for decluttering, sustainability, and mindfulness, rather than copy-pasting traditions. Kondo asks whether an object sparks joy for the individual. Pingali asks how an object fits into a larger ecosystem of needs, memory, and responsibility. A brass lamp may not spark joy each day, but it holds cultural continuity. A repaired cushion may lack glamour but carries ecological value. Her philosophy is less about ruthless minimalism than mindful connectedness.

The writing is warm and often witty, peppered with personal anecdotes. She admits that decluttering is messy and emotional, and that modern lives resist easy fixes. This honesty makes the book feel more companionable than doctrinaire.

If the book has a quiet manifesto, it is this: India has always known how to live lightly. Our traditions of craft, ritual, and cyclical living carried ecological wisdom long before sustainability became a buzzword. Decluttering, Pingali shows, isn't a chore to import from elsewhere. It is part of our cultural inheritance, waiting to be rediscovered.

For readers weary of the relentless self-help aisle, Pingali offers something gentler and more rooted. Her book is part cultural history, part manual, part meditation. If Marie Kondo helped the world fold its shirts, Bhawana Pingali helps us unfold our inheritances, ritual by ritual, stitch by stitch, day by day.

Delhi, Bombay HCs get bomb threat; hearings suspended

BS REPORTER
New Delhi, 12 September

A bomb threat on Friday spread panic in the Delhi High Court (HC) for litigants and judges alike, prompting the latter to rise abruptly. Shortly after this, the Bombay HC also received a similar threat leading to the suspension of hearings.

After the evacuation of judges and litigants from courtrooms, the Delhi police declared it a hoax. Similarly, nothing was found on the Bombay HC premises. Both emails were received allegedly from the same source, people in the know said. The email allegedly mentioned three bombs planted in the courtroom of three judges in Delhi. A bomb disposal van, two fire brigade vehicles, and two ambulances were spotted outside the Delhi HC premises. Chief Justice of India B.R. Gavai sought a report on the bomb threat case in Delhi and the Bombay HC and has asked the Secretary General of the Supreme Court to provide an update on the case. Various prominent establishments and schools in New Delhi had received similar bomb threats in the recent past.
