Two Brothers Organic Farms investing in tech to ensure supply-chain transparency

Subramani Ra Mancombu
 Chennai

Certified family-run organic farm company Two Brothers Organic Farms (TBOF) is investing in technologies and processes to ensure complete transparency in its supply chain.

QR code-based product traceability. Consumers can scan QR codes on packaging to access sourcing details, farm locations, processing methods, and farmer details — tracking exactly where their food comes from,” said Satyajit Hange, Co-founder of Two Brothers Organic Farms. Other initiatives include Blockchain-based authentication (Polygon), where batch-wise product history is recorded on a blockchain ledger to prevent tampering and false claims and geo-tagging of farms to ensure traceability of native grains, daisies, and other ingredients used in production. The company also does independent lab testing by publishing third-party lab test results for purity and nutrition verification.

EXPANSION PLANS

“These technologies enhance trust, differentiate TBOF from mass-market brands, and ensure compliance with global organic standards,” said Hange in an email interaction with businessline.

On the organisation’s expansion plans, he said it will continue to double down on existing channels, with special focus on retail and quick-commerce growth in India. “Expanding offline retail presence through premium retail partnerships, quick commerce accounts and modern trade outlets, increasing penetration in Tier

2 & 3 cities through direct D2C sales are part of this,” he said. TBOF has launched its D2C website in the US and is strategically targeting the premium Indian diaspora. It is investing in influencer marketing and community building among NRIs, resorting to premium brand activations. Other expansion plans include promoting its products as corporate and wedding gifting, strengthening transparency and trust through digital tools.

On its foray in the US, Hange said its expansion in the US is “progressing steadily”. The organisation has come up with a fully functional Shopify-based D2C website for the US, enabling international shipping.

It is engaging Indian-origin chefs, wellness influencers, and food enthusiasts in the US to build brand awareness. TBOF is organising premium food and wellness events, launching festival campaigns targeting Navratri, Diwali, and the New Year to win over the NRI segment.
