Google introduces 'Google Web Academy' in India in alliance with NIIT

Aims to bridge the skill gap by offering leading training curricula and certification standards for Online Professionals, Developers & Cloud Computing professionals

New Delhi, July 19, 2012: Google today introduced a comprehensive training program for young professionals in India in alliance with NIIT Limited, Asia's largest IT trainer & leading Global Talent Development Corporation. The program named 'Google Web Academy' (http://www.niitgooglewebacademy.com/), aims to bridge the digital skill gap in the country and help students and professionals capitalize on the emerging job market for the online industry. Under the programme, Google will train NIIT's faculty and certified professionals and help young professionals to gain useful skills required in the job market in the online space. The programme will be initially offered in India, and subsequently launched in other parts of the emerging world.

Speaking about the launch Rajan Anandan, VP & Managing Director Google India, said "As the Indian internet market continues to show robust growth, we believe a capacity building program to help young professionals gear up for the opportunity is the need of the hour. Google Web Academy is part of our initiative for emerging Internet economies and we're very excited to launch this in India first. We've been working with NIIT to offer advanced online advertising program and we're pleased to strengthen our association to offer world-leading training curriculum and certification standards to offer advanced training programs to professionals and students in India."

Commenting on the launch of this initiative, Vijay Thadani, Chief Executive Officer, NIIT Limited said, "At NIIT, we have always taken the lead to address the need for professionally trained manpower for promising sectors, through cutting-edge IT training courses. Perceiving the need for digitally qualified professionals in today's environment, we are pleased to further extend our association with Google to launch Google Web
