APPLE'S NEW VISION for the future of computing is a giant, iPad-like foldable device. Apple is also planning satellite and health upgrades for its

Every so often, Apple puts forth a bold new vision for the future of computing. Its most recent version of this, of course, was the Vision Pro headset. In that case, Apple laid out a scenario where consumers accomplish the majority of their computing tasks in mixed reality — the melding of virtual and augmented reality. And it's easy to see the appeal of this, at least in the abstract. The Vision Pro and other mixed-reality headsets provide users with endless screen space and more of an immersive experience than one can get with a phone or computer.

But the concept has some drawbacks, such as the discomfort of wearing a device on your face for long periods of time. It can easily take a person out of the real world. Moreover, the Vision Pro's $3,499 price tag ensures that few consumers will be embracing this experience just yet.

So for now, it's hard to beat the traditional form factors – phones, laptops, tablets when it comes to computing. But Apple is working on another approach that could become its next breakthrough device. Apple designers are developing something akin to a giant iPad that unfolds into the size of two iPad Pros sideby-side. The Cupertino, California-based company has been honing the product for a couple of years now and is aiming to bring something to market around 2028.

Apple's goal for a foldable

device is to avoid the crease that current products have when they're in the open position. And the company has made progress on this front: Prototypes of this new product within Apple's industrial design group have a nearly invisible crease. But it's too early to tell if Apple will can get rid of it altogether. Samsung Electronics, which launched its first foldable phone five years ago, has tried unsuccessfully to remove the crease.

Right now, Apple's largest iPad tops out at 13 inches. Apple knows that customers gamers, software developers or just people watching movies, want the biggest screen possible. And the only way to sensibly ship a mobile product with a large display(one approaching 20 inches or so) is to make it foldable. Otherwise, it's too hard to throw into a purse or backpack.

Apple wouldn't be the first to try such a concept. Microsoft prototyped something similar with the Courier more than a decade ago and then announced a dual-screen tablet called the Neo in 2019. The company abandoned both attempts, and the conclusion of the Neo cancellation was that consumers weren't clamoring for a dual-screen tablet. —BLOOMBERG SUANSHU KHURANA New Delhi, December 16

IT ISN'T OFTEN that a percussionist finds life in the intricacies of punctuation. Its pauses mostly remain the preserve of literature. Tabla virtuoso Ustad Zakir Hussain (73), whose tenacity went beyond the cadence, tone, tempo and inflection; whose eloquence in putting apostrophes, ellipses and exclamations in the mathematically labyrinthine stories, lifted the tabla, and hoisted it as India's flag for over half a century, died in San Francisco on Sunday. His family said in a statement that he was suffering from idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis, a lung disease. He had been hospitalised over two weeks ago. Hussain is survived by wife and Kathak teacher Antonia Minnecola, daughters Isabella Qureshi, Anisa Qureshi, brothers and tabla players Fazal and Taufiq Qureshi, and sister Khursheed Aulia. "His prolific work as a teacher, mentor and educator has left an indelible mark on countless musicians. He hoped to inspire the next generation to go further. He leaves behind an unparalleled legacy," his family said.

the court of music". A child prodigy, the story goes that when Hussain was born, his father and Punjab gharana tabla legend Ustad Alla Rakha whispered tabla bols (syllables used to represent the sounds of the instrument) in his son's ears instead of a prayer from the Quran. When his angry Khan among othwife asked him why, Alla Rakha's answer was uncomplicated: tabla bols were as good as ibaadat (prayers) for him. Alla Rakha was a doting father but an exacting guru, who taught his eldest son with a lot of enthusiasm in their one-room apartment behind the Mahim dargah.The training began when he was just three years old – first as mathematical games which later turned into sophisticated rhythm patterns and stories from life. Hussain blossomed. But he also yearned to do things that other children his age did. Like playing cricket, a sport his father banished after he almost broke a finger when a ball hit it one day. admiration and fans in India as well as abroad. While his father and his technical brilliance brought out the tabla from the shadows of being a background accompanying instrument and gave it social stature like never before, Hussain made it unambiguous, spontaneous and thrilling -- glamorous even.

Over two years ago, the poignant moment when he was one of the pallbearers for santoor maestro Pandit Shiv Kumar Sharma, his grief palpable on his masked face, was discussed extensively on social media as a true example of the "idea of India". For Hussain, it was not as reductive in nature, but only a gesture to mark the deep bond musical and otherwise, the two had shared over the years.

"I think people and politicians exist on two different planes... We tend to generalise and in doing so, create the danger of a bigger schism than we actually need to. Not everyone of any sect is bad. That idea seems to have taken a backseat. What we need to do is just be able to hear whatever the powers that be want to tell us, but judge for ourselves as citizens where is it that we belong and what it is that we need in our lives to make it better. Probably we'll get there one of these days,"he said. Avis-had more shows and collaborative projects lined up. His next year was already booked out. But in all of the tizzy of his busy touring life, when the sound of the tabla had become more of a pleasureseeking exercise than just showing off the technical prowess, where new idioms were being formed and where the noble world of caution was thrown to the wind, all that remained was a haze — original, thorough and the kind that is remembered for a lifetime.
