'SOME THINGS YOU CAN NEGOTIATE, SOME YOU CAN'T'

We want America to respect our red lines, says Jaishankar

DIVYA A
New Delhi, October 5

UNDERLINING THAT "THERE are things you can negotiate and there are things you can't, external affairs minister S Jaishankar said Sunday that India has been in talks with the US for "a trade understanding" where "our bottom lines and red lines are respected".

External affairs minister S Jaishankar during the 4th edition of Kautilya Economic Conclave, in New Delhi on Sunday PTI

There is a second tariff, which we regard as very unfair... for sourcing energy from Russia... Quad has a sort of a bureaucratic set-up at different levels in different dimensions, people engage with each other. Quad is alive, and Quad is well

He also said both sides "have not arrived at a landing ground for our trade discussions". Speaking at the concluding session of the Kautilya Economic Conclave in New Delhi, Jaishankar, referring to the Trump administration's imposition of 50% tariffs on India including 25% over its purchase of Russian oil, said, "I am not minimising the issues, but I don't think we should take it to a point, as though this is going to percolate to every dimension of the relationship... we need to see this in proportion."

The US has been seeking access for its products in India's agriculture and dairy markets. In his Independence Day address, Prime Minister Narendra Modi, without naming the US or its imposition of tariffs, said he is "standing like a wall" against any adverse policy that could impact Indian farmers, fisherfolk and cattle keepers.

Jaishankar, on being asked about the state of India-US ties, said, "There are issues, nobody is in denial. I also want to say a large part of the relationship is actually continuing, either as business as usual or in fact, in some cases, more than that."

"Today, a big part of our issues with the US is the fact that we have not arrived at a landing ground for our trade discussions. And the inability so far to reach there has led to a certain tariff being levied," he said.

"In addition, there is a second tariff, which we regard as very unfair... for sourcing energy from Russia, and of course, other countries who have done so including countries who right now have a far more antagonistic relationship with Russia than we do."

He dwelt at length on the additional penalty tariff levied on India by the US for import of Russian oil, saying this move by the US challenges the basics of competitiveness and market economics.

"At a time when you have price gaps on energy, when you have sanctions on energy, when you have subsidies on renewables, I am kind of scratching my head and wondering, where is market economics," he said.

"When you have a world where trade was the central subject, consideration of trade has now become tariffs. Where are comparative advantages and competitiveness? It's not just the basics of politics that we are revisiting in many ways, it is also the basics of economics," he said.

"We are negotiating. It has got to be a trade understanding with the US, the world's largest market, but also because much of the world has reached those understandings. But it has to be an understanding where our bottom lines and red lines are respected," he said.

"There are things you can negotiate and there are things you can't. And we are pretty clear about that, and that has been the conversation really, which has been going on since March," he said.

On the future of the Quad grouping comprising the US, India, Japan and Australia — India to host the summit this year and there's still no clarity on whether President Donald Trump will attend — Jaishankar assuaged concerns, saying "Quad is alive, and Quad is well".

"This year, we have had two meetings of Quad foreign ministers, one in January, the first meeting after the Trump administration came to power, and one in July."

"Quad has a sort of a bureaucratic set-up at different levels in different dimensions, people engage with each other, and that continues. Quad is alive, and Quad is well," he said.

● SEAN MICHAEL DOUGHERTY, SENIOR ADVISER, OECD

'India's growth intact despite US tariffs'

US President Donald Trump's tariff policy has caused many countries to think more carefully about how they can create autonomous growth pillars, drawing on their comparative advantages, said

Sean Michael Dougherty, senior adviser at the Organisation for Economic Co-Operation and Development (OECD). India should push AI in health and education to improve service delivery while reducing costs, he told Prasanta Sahu. Dougherty was in New Delhi to attend the Kautilya Economic Conclave. Excerpts:

How are the US tariff policies going to impact the world economy, trade, and, in particular, India?

We've always promoted fair and open trade; however, our global economic forecast reveals significant uncertainties related to trade policy. So far, the initial adjustments have been, in some ways, better than expected, but there are many risks on the horizon. Some of the effects may come in a delayed way. The latest forecast for the US in particular isn't especially strong. We have around 1.5% growth for this year and next, coming down from a stronger growth forecast earlier in 2025. The growth prospects for India still look good, despite US trade policies being a major concern. We have roughly 6.5% growth expected for India both this year and next. Many things are in place, despite the trade tensions, and it's encouraging. I would say there is a strong focus here in India on the key challenges about the future, around Asian integration, and about creating trade zones of like-minded countries. We saw this clearly at the Kautilya Economic Conclave this weekend.

Do you think Trump's America First policy is sustainable for his country and the world at large?

I think it has caused many countries to think more carefully about how they can create autonomous growth pillars. India has a very strong demographic base and many advantages in this quite challenging time. We see AI bringing a wave of new economic opportunities. Continued structural reforms are becoming even more important. India has a major need to increase female labour force participation. AI is both a kind of hammer and a wand. It will force changes in how we think about the future and about what the growth pillars are, but at the same time, it creates an accelerator, strengthening the capacity of people across different parts of the labour force to be more productive and to increase their incomes.

What is the potential you see for AI in India?

I think we see a lot of good potential. You don't necessarily need to have your own AI models to be on the right track. The same is true for Europe. We have some good AI models like Mistral in France, which are arguably safer than some elsewhere. But I think the real opportunity here is not on the model training side; it's on the adoption side. Probably the biggest public sector opportunities are in health and education. Even if we are only able to automate routine back-office tasks, like writing notes, billing, and scheduling, this could save, in some cases, as much as 25% of costs and allow more focus on delivering high-quality healthcare augmented by AI. I think that's a great opportunity for a country like India. We need to think more about how to facilitate adoption in organisations, public and private, and accelerate good individual use, particularly through the education system.

Does India still have a prospect of being a manufacturing hub, given the current global realignment of supply chains?

I think that's an important opportunity, and geopolitics has pushed in that direction. While the current tariffs from the US probably are not helpful, maybe that will get resolved soon. I know efforts are underway on both sides.

Aside from that, the supply chains often involve intermediary trading partners anyway, and here India can probably draw on its comparative advantages, often in services, organisational logistics, and workers' fluency in English. In India, there's a long legacy of dis-favouring manufacturing and overregulating it. The government is trying to address those issues. Giving more opportunities to states to experiment is also really important.

Are you satisfied with India's policy on fiscal consolidation and its commitment?

World economies after Covid are under tremendous fiscal pressure. Debt has increased dramatically, including in India. In an international context, India is in a better position, and with its strong growth prospects, I think it's well-placed to manage it effectively. There are problems at the state level, but those are continual issues that need to be addressed through good fiscal policy. In particular, the 16th Finance Commission can play a constructive role in promoting the right incentives.

WE SEE AI BRINGING A WAVE OF NEW ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITIES. CONTINUED STRUCTURAL REFORMS ARE BECOMING EVEN MORE IMPORTANT

BSNL to upgrade all towers to 5G in 6-8 months: Scindia

OJASVI GUPTA
New Delhi, October 5

STATE-RUN TELECOM OPERATOR Bharat Sanchar Nigam (BSNL) will upgrade all its 4G towers to 5G within the next six to eight months, as part of India's broader push to develop a homegrown telecom ecosystem, Union communications minister Jyotiraditya Scindia said.

Speaking at the fourth Kautilya Economic Conclave here,

Scindia said BSNL's fully indigenous 4G stack — developed by C-DOT, Tejas Networks and Tata Consultancy Services — has placed India among a select group of five countries capable of delivering an end-to-end homegrown telecom solution.

"When BSNL advanced down the route of executing on 4G, there was a difficult decision to make. The easy path was to buy equipment from foreign vendors which are only four in the world; the difficult path was to invent our own 4G stack," the minister said.

"In just 22 months, we developed our own core software, radio access network (RAN), and had an Indian system integrator in TCS," he added.

So far, 92,564 towers have been commissioned across the country, the minister said, noting that Prime Minister Narendra Modi inaugurated them last week. India now has the fastest 5G rollout in the world, covering 99.8% of districts.

Local electronics value set to double: Elcina

RECORD PROPOSALS SUBMITTED under India's first scheme for non-semiconductor electronic components are likely to double local value addition in the production of finished goods to up to 40% over the next five years, according to industry body Elcina.

The electronics component makers' body has urged state governments to enhance ease of doing business to support the Centre's Electronics Component Manufacturing Scheme (ECMS).

ECMS has received investment proposals worth ₹1.15 lakh crore, which is more than double the target of ₹59,000 crore envisaged under the scheme.
