Why SIPs, STPs should be investment mantra to achieve long-term goals?

Chennai, Mar 22: Have you heard of the phrase 'Jump on to the bandwagon'? It means participating in an activity or trend without sufficient due diligence. When it comes to investing, this is often the bane of most investors, as they try to 'time the market' based on trends. In the process, they are either irrationally exuberant or unrealistically pessimistic, and end up making inaccurate investment decisions.

A simple way to avoid this situation and yet earn reasonable returns is through the Systematic Investment Planning (SIP) route. In simple words, SIP is a service offered by mutual fund houses, wherein the investor can make periodic payments of a pre-determined sum to buy units of a mutual fund scheme. In turn, they can earn returns from the holdings of the fund (NAV based). Coupled with the benefit of compounding, SIPs may offer reasonable returns in the long-term.

Cognisant of this benefit, there has been a steady rise in the number of new SIP account registrations. What's more, along with SIPs, mutual fund houses also offer investors the benefit of a Systematic Transfer Plan (STP). This allows investors to transfer their investment from one scheme to another, within the same fund house. As a result, investors can rebalance their portfolios seamlessly based on evolving market conditions to achieve their desired goals. By leveraging the power of SIPs and STPs, investors can develop a robust financial plan to meet their goals in life.

Benefits of SIPs.
Small Investment Amount - SIPs enable investors to start investing with an amount as little as INR 100/500/1000 a month. Thus, they can start investing early on in their career. These small savings, over the long-term can potentially result in wealth creation opportunities.

Most investors start investing enthusiastically, but fail to stick to an investment plan. This takes them away from meeting their financial goals.

Rupee cost averaging supports an investor during market fluctuations by making investments that are less impacted by market volatility.

One of the most compelling reasons to start a SIP is the power to compound money over time. The money invested in the market via mutual funds may allow investors to earn reasonable returns.

While investing, investors should keep emotions at bay. In the short-term, the markets fluctuate considerably and the volatility of the market often encourages people to make emotional investment decisions that could fail to deliver expected results.

Benefits of an STP:
One of the biggest advantages of STP is that it allows an investor to rebalance his/her portfolio based on evolving market conditions or his/her financial needs.

Investors can customize the STP basis their requirements. This includes day, date and frequency of STP (ranging from daily to yearly), the amount that is to be transferred as well as the number of instalments or duration of the transfer.

There are three important types of STP - Fixed, Capital Appreciation and Flexi. Under the first type, the STP amount is decided at the beginning of the investment, whereas in the second, the returns generated from the scheme are redirected towards another scheme.

So on one hand, SIPs allow investors to adopt a disciplined approach towards long term wealth creation. On the other, STPs allow them to smartly manoeuvre these allocations. Put together, these can help investors create a comprehensive financial plan that takes them closer to their goals in life.
