Nasdaq Slides 2.2% as Tech Sell-off Deepens

UNDERWHELMING OUTLOOK S&P 500 falls 0.5%, while Nasdaq 100 breaches its 100-day moving average; Bitcoin tumbles 3%

Bloomberg
New York: Wall Street traders kept driving a rotation out of tech giants whose all-weather earnings made them safe bets at times of economic uncertainty, and into a broader category of firms tuned to improving growth prospects. Bitcoin extended its rout. While most shares in the S&P 500 rose after solid US services data, the index fell. The Nasdaq 100 sank over 2.2%. Software firms were caught in another wave of selling, but moves were more pronounced in chipmakers on Wednesday, with Advanced Micro Devices Inc. tumbling 17% on an underwhelming outlook. Commodity producers, consumer staples and banks climbed. The S&P 500 fell 0.5%. The Nasdaq

100 breached its 100-day moving average, a level seen by some technical analysts as a harbinger for more losses. The iShares Expanded Tech Software Sector ETF slid 2.1%. A closely watched gauge of chipmakers sank 4.5%. Bitcoin tumbled 3%. The yield on 10-year Treasuries was little changed at 4.27%. A key part of the US yield curve is near its steepest level in four years. The dollar added 0.3%. Gold slipped below $5,000. "There might be a glass half full and a glass half empty perspective on the moves here," said Kyle Lobbada of Capital.com. "On the one hand, tech stocks are potentially too richly valued. On the other hand, the strength in the market is broadening out in a sign of improving economic fundamentals, backed up by data that shows more robust economic conditions. The dynamic will be brought into sharp focus in the next few days with more results from big techs. Alphabet Inc., the top performer among the "Magnificent Seven" megacaps last year, will report results after the close.

Software Selloff 'Most Illogical Thing'

Nvidia Corp CEO Jensen Huang, leader of the company whose gear is central to the worldwide build-out of artificial intelligence data centres, said this week's sell-off in the shares of software companies amid concerns about AI disruption makes no sense. Software products are tools, and artificial intelligence will use those tools, not reinvent them. Huang said during an appearance at a Cisco Systems Inc. event late Tuesday, "It's the most illogical thing in the world," he said. "There's this notion that the tools is in decline and being replaced

Wall St's Rotation Into Value Has a Dot-Com Warning

At the same time, makers of consumer staples, energy producers and materials miners advanced as investors sought companies that will benefit from an expected uptick in economic growth. The large cap-growth trade feels "anachronistic," CFRA's Sam Stovall wrote a few weeks ago. Since then, value has only extended its outperformance over Big Tech. That view is somewhat echoed by Ned Davis Research, where chief US equity strategist Ed Clissold is urging clients to adopt a "value tilt" over growth stocks. Andrew Greenbaum, senior vice president of equity research product management at Jefferies, argues the rotation may be just starting. "Value has gained a lot of ground versus growth recently but if you look further back—even just to the start of the Fed's last hike cycle—there is plenty of room for outperformance," Greenbaum said. That's because value's renaissance has been a long time coming. In contrast, the RLV closed at an all-time high. The three-month slump in US technology stocks has left long-downtrodden value stocks looking relatively strong. There's growing consensus on Wall Street the shift is just getting started. The Russell 1000 Value Index (RLV) has advanced 8.6% from early November to Tuesday, beating its growth counterpart by 14 percentage points. Prior periods of such outperformance have led to further gains for value versus growth. But there is a dark lining: The last two times the value index outperformed its growth counterpart by this much during a similar time span was during a bear market rout in 2002 and the early days of a dot-com bust in 2001. This time also brings warnings from Wall Street strategists that the era of Big Tech dominance is likely nearing its end. The shift was on full display Tuesday, when a rout in software makers sparked a broad selloff in tech shares—the predominant weighting in the growth index. In contrast, the RLV closed at an
