BEST CHANCE FOR EU TO AVOID ECONOMIC DISASTER

Why Europe fears flood of cheap goods from China

MICHAEL D SHEAR & JEANNA SMIALEK

London/Brussels, April 14

CHINA HAS FOR years presented an economic challenge for Europe. Now, it could become an economic disaster.

It produces a vast array of artificially cheap goods — heavily subsidised electric vehicles, consumer electronics, toys, commercial grade steel and more — but much of that trade was destined for the endlessly voracious American marketplace.

Now, with many of those goods facing an extraordinary wall of tariffs thanks to President Trump, fear is rising that more products will be dumped in Europe, weakening local industries in France, Germany, Italy and the rest of the European Union (EU).

Those nations now find themselves trapped in the middle of Trump's spiraling trade war with China. Their leaders are straddling a fine line between capitulation and confrontation, hoping to avoid becoming collateral damage.

"The overcapacity challenge has taken a long time, but it has finally arrived in European capitals," said Liana Fix, a Washington-based fellow at the Council on Foreign Relations. "There is a general trend and a feeling in Europe that in these times, Europe has to stand up for itself and has to protect itself."

Ursula von der Leyen, the president of the European Commission, has promised to "engage constructively" with China even as she has warned about the "indirect effects" of the American tariffs and has vowed to closely watch the flow of Chinese goods. A new task force will monitor imports for signs of dumping.

"We cannot absorb global overcapacity nor will we accept dumping on our market," von der Leyen said as Trump's tariffs went into effect.

Her tough but measured message to both China and the United States has impressed trade experts who say it may be the best chance for Europe to avoid economic disaster. Janka Oertel, the director of the Asia programme at the European Council on Foreign Relations, called it a "sober" response to the threat from Beijing.

"They continue to stand their ground on China, because otherwise they lose it," she said.

But the high stakes moment is testing the conti-

HAZARDOUS SCENARIO

■ Fear is rising that more products will be dumped in Europe, weakening local industries in France, Germany, Italy and the rest of the European Union (EU)

■ The EU is straddling a fine line between capitulation and confrontation, hoping to avoid collateral damage

■ Ursula von der Leyen, the president of the European Commission, has promised to "engage constructively" with China

■ Germany last year opposed higher electric vehicle tariffs imposed by the EU

■ In Britain, no longer a member of the EU, Prime Minister Keir Starmer has called for "consistent, durable, respectful" relations with China nent's unity.

Pedro Sánchez, the Spanish prime minister, last week traveled to Beijing to meet with President Xi Jinping, urging greater engagement with China as a hedge against US tariffs. His outreach, captured visually in a handshake with the Chinese leader, came even as von der Leyen and the leadership of the European Commission, the bloc's executive branch, continue to demand assurances from Beijing that the dumping would not accelerate.

Germany last year opposed higher electric vehicle tariffs imposed by the EU, afraid that China would raise taxes on its own car industry. In Britain, no longer a member of the bloc, Prime Minister Keir Starmer has called for "consistent, durable, respectful" relations with China as he struggles to jump-start his country's sluggish economy.

"The worst-case scenario is high US tariffs" while at the same time "China is flooding the European market," said Noah Barkin, a senior adviser for the Rhodium Group, a policy research organisation. He said that would be "a double whammy for European industry. That is what Europe wants to avoid."

Leaders who argue that closer ties with China may be part of the answer, like Sánchez in Spain and Starmer in Britain, have found it to be a politically winning message at a time when their countries are eager for more foreign investment.

Announcements of a new Chinese factory that will eventually create thousands of jobs are popular at home. But at times, that eagerness can threaten to undercut a consistent, European message on trade.

"Spain sees things very differently from Poland," said Theresa Fallon, director at the Center for Russia, Europe, Asia Studies in Brussels. "There's an ongoing debate in Europe about what their stance towards China should be."

But trade experts say the economic relationship between Europe and China is rooted in a decades-old reality: a Chinese marketplace that is effectively closed to many European companies because of regulatory burdens and the Communist Party's buttressing of Chinese companies. The European trade deficit with China was nearly $332 billion (€292 billion) in 2023.

The EU leadership describes China as a "systemic rival," and relations with the Asian nation have soured in recent years for a host of reasons, including China's support of Russia as it wages war on Ukraine.

Recent conversations between top European commissioners and their Chinese counterparts have contained blunt warnings from the European side.

"Current EU-China trade relations remain unbalanced," the European Commission said in a statement after Maros Sefcovic, the bloc's trade commissioner, visited Beijing to discuss market access. The statement hinted at tensions during the visit, saying that China and Europe have a widening trade deficit "fuelled by illegal subsidies."

European officials have for years demanded concessions from China that include voluntary restraints on the shipment of cheap goods and minimum prices to offset large government subsidies that European businesses charge are unfair.

Meanwhile, Chinese officials have seemed eager in recent days to paint Europe as an increasingly close trading partner. China's readout after Sefcovic's visit to Beijing had little mention of hard talk. It said that Sefcovic had described China as "an important partner" and that the two economies would "jointly resist unilateralism and protectionism."

And after Trump's April 2 tariff announcement, China's commerce ministry said it had agreed to restart negotiations with the bloc over Europe's higher tariffs on Chinese-made electric vehicles.

When asked about that announcement, European officials struck a more muted tone. Olof Gill, an EU spokesman for trade, said officials had agreed to "continue discussions" on electric vehicle supply chains and take a "fresh look" at pricing. —NYT

Hospitality transactions witness shift towards tier II, III cities in 2024: JLL

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA
Mumbai, April 14

INDIA'S HOSPITALITY SECTOR, which grew on par with the previous year, witnessed a shift towards tier-II and III cities, which accounted for nearly half of all hotel transactions, a report said on Monday.

The year 2024 saw approximately 25 deals, primarily involving operational properties in both business and leisure destinations, real estate consultant JLL said in a report.

It said there was a significant shift towards tier-II and III cities, which accounted for nearly half of all hotel transactions.

This trend has effectively broadened the industry's reach, bringing quality accommodations to previously underserved markets such as Amritsar, Mathura, Bikaner, and several others, it added.

During 2024, the report said, saw investor diversity with high-net-worth individuals, family offices, and private hotel owners contributing 51% of the transaction volume.

Listed hotel companies followed closely at 34%, while owner-operators and real estate developers made smaller but significant contributions at 8% and 7%, respectively, it stated.

The number of greenfield projects in 2024 (28,281 keys) crossed the full year of 2023 (13,600 keys), indicating the enduring confidence of hotel developers in the sector's long-term growth.

Tier I markets such as Mumbai, Bengaluru, Hyderabad, Pune, and Chennai saw signings of hotels with over 250 keys, signalling sustained interest in these hubs due to robust domestic demand and thriving commercial activity, said the report.

Eye on illegal bats, IPL hands umpires a gauge to check size during games

DEVENDRA PANDEY

& NIHAL KOSHIE

Mumbai/New Delhi, April 14

AT THE START of this IPL season, South African fast bowler Kagiso Rabada echoed a key concern voiced by many about the lack of balance between bat and ball in T20 cricket.

With teams pushing to cross the 300-run mark, he said that if the trend continued, the game should be called "batting" not "cricket".

The BCCI is now moving to strike a balance.

Going ahead, every IPL batsman will have to pass the bat through a gauge before taking guard. While the fourth umpire will check the bats of openers before they enter the field, every subsequent batsman will have to clear the "bat gauge" wielded by on-field umpires.

The move comes after several cases of batsmen using "oversized" bats came to light. In the IPL, such batsmen have been let off with warnings but on the English county circuit, Nottinghamshire was docked points last year in one such case.

IPL chairman Arun Dhumal said the decision was taken to ensure fairness on the field. "Nobody should feel that somebody's got an undue advantage," he said.

"The BCCI and IPL have always taken all initiatives in this direction so that fairness of the game is maintained. We have used technology to the maximum to make sure that all decisions can be reviewed so that the games don't get unfairly affected.

BAT SCANNER

Umpire checking MI captain Hardik Pandya's bat

"The idea behind this initiative is to ensure that the spirit of the game is maintained," Dhumal said.

The triangle-shaped plastic gauge has the dimensions of a legal bat printed on it: depth 2.68 inches, width 4.33 inches, edges 1.61 inches. The curve, or the bulge of the bat, seen on the lower non-hitting side of the bat, needs to be within 0.20 inches.

Before this season, bats were not tested on match days; officials would conduct tests on the eve of the game. But this system had an obvious loophole: some batsmen would turn up for the game with different bats.

According to IPL insiders, T20 batsmen who bend rules generally tweak the "bat

Total depth	2.68 in/6.8 cm
Width	4.33 in/11.0 cm
Edge	1.61 in/4.1 cm
Curve	0.20 in/0.5 cm

bulge" to their advantage, making the so-called "sweet spot" sweeter without increasing the legal weight.

"They bulk up the lower part of the bat since that is the area of the bat where the batsmen try to make contact with the ball. More wood around the 'sweet spot' and less wood close to the handle gives more power to strokes," said an international batsman who has played with oversized bats.

The less-cautious batsmen, known for hitting sixes from the first ball, prefer bats with thicker edges. This means that even the balls they mistime often sail over the boundary. But now with stricter scrutiny on the field in the public eye, officials hope no batsman would knowingly walk out with an oversized illegal bat.

Bat manufacturers have also welcomed the BCCI move and promised to be "more stringent".

Paras Anand, CEO, Sanspareils Greenlands, said, "Bats made by SG go through the bat gauge. But because players' bats were not being closely scrutinised, we were not being 100% particular about it (bat size). However, the variation was just about 1mm, or one-and-a-half mm, which does not make a big difference. It is good that cricket bats of all players are being closely checked (by referees and umpires) at the IPL now or else players can take the liberty of getting bigger bats made."

Anand said, "We at SG will also be more stringent about checking our bats. But that said there is unlikely to be a reduction in the number of sixes being hit because it is not just the size of the bat that is a factor, but this generation of players are stronger, practice power hitting a lot more and practice innovative shot making."
