Electricity: Overhauling tariff policy

Unless tariff policy is revamped, India's discoms will be more obstacles than catalysts in the transition to a renewables-driven electrostate

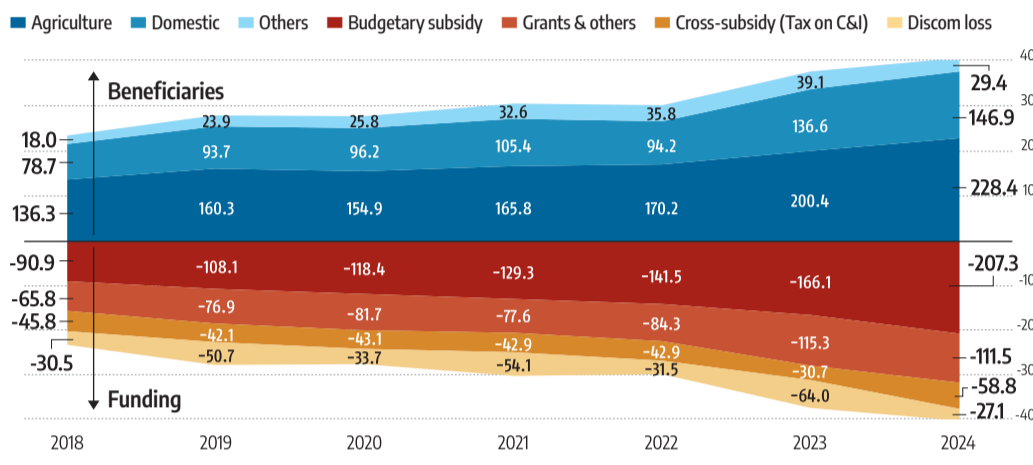

ABHISHEK ANAND, PRAVEEN RAVI, NAVNEERAJ SHARMA & ARVIND SUBRAMANIAN

Two questions with surprising answers. First, how much do Indian states subsidise electricity for farmers and households? Second, what is the tax imposed on electricity used by Indian industry? On the former, experts point to budgetary subsidy allocations of about ₹2.1 trillion in 2023-24 (see the report to the 16th Finance Commission). But the true "economic" subsidy — measured as the gap between the cost of supply and the price these consumers actually pay — is closer to ₹4 trillion (a staggering 1.4 per cent of gross domestic product, or GDP), nearly double the official figure. On the latter, policymakers cite electricity duties, which range from zero to 16.5 per cent across states. In reality, the implicit tax on manufacturing through electricity pricing is far higher — often pushing tariffs to nearly 1.5 times the efficient cost for much of the past decade, as Devesh Kapur and one of us document in a recent book, A Sixth of Humanity. These discrepancies have implications for policy reforms. But to understand them, we must first understand how electricity tariffs are set in India. The animating principle, indeed the obsession, is equity: Subsidising farmers and households. The challenge then is to pursue this without financially crippling electricity distribution companies (discoms). The figure shows the true economic subsidy (the gap between cost and price), and how it has been financed since FY18. It comes from four sources: Explicit budgetary subsidy transfers, higher tariffs on commercial and industrial users (the so-called cross-subsidy), central and state government grants, and discom losses. What is commonly reported as the "power subsidy" (₹2.1 trillion) captures only the first of these. The rest are hidden. The term "cross-subsidy" itself is Orwellian. It is, in effect, a punitive tax on economic activity. Because some consumers are charged well below cost, discoms compensate by charging industrial and commercial users well above cost. There has been some progress. Discom losses have declined recently. The share of subsidies funded through explicit budgets has increased, and reliance on cross-subsidies has declined. But the remaining tax burden is still large (about 50 per cent above efficient cost), and it continues to undermine the competitiveness of Indian manufacturing. Successive reforms have tried to fix this. The Electricity Act of

Electricity subsidies: Who benefits and who pays? ('000 crore)

Note: High Tension (HT) supply assumed at 84% of system ACS (based on voltage-wise loss data across 6 states). Cross-subsidy = C&I and traction payment above voltage-weighted cost. Under "grants and others," grants — both central (UDAY, RDSS) and state government — are the main component; "others" denotes non-tariff discom revenue (wheeling charges, late payment surcharges, and other income), which is relatively small. Source: PFC Reports on Performance of Power Utilities (2019-20 to 2024-25). State sector, energy sold basis

2003 mandated cost-reflective tariffs and explicit subsidies. The proposed Electricity (Amendment) Bill, 2025 pushes in the same direction. Yet, more than two decades later, cross-subsidies persist. Why? Because equity is invoked at every stage — by actors who are, functionally, the same entity. State-owned discoms propose tariffs for farmers and households that are already below cost. Regulators — often staffed by former bureaucrats or discom officials — approve them. State governments then announce subsidies relative to this artificially low baseline. In a well-designed system, the regulator would determine the true cost of supply, and set tariffs on purely technical grounds. Setting tariffs below cost would not be allowed. If governments wish to subsidise certain consumers, they should do so explicitly — by paying the full difference from their budgets. Equity is the government's prerogative, and its burden, not the regulator's nor the discoms'. The current system creates perverse incentives. By keeping tariffs artificially low, governments can expand subsidies — especially for households — without a commensurate increase in their reported subsidy bill, because the subsidy is calculated against an understated baseline rather than the true cost. This allows states to promise free or cheap power while keeping the official numbers manageable. The result is more subsidy than is affordable — and less equity than intended. Nearly 60 per cent of household electricity subsidies accrue to the middle class and the rich (the top 10-20 per cent), not the truly needy. The competitive populism of recent years in electricity pricing is a direct consequence of these distorted incentives. But the costs do not disappear. They are shifted to industrial and commercial users who pay through higher tariffs. Future taxpayers pay through eventual bailouts of financially stressed discoms. Note that the central government and state governments, by providing periodic grants, and public sector entities such as the Power Finance Corporation (PFC) and Rural Electrification Corporation (REC), by providing ongoing financing, are all complicit in softening the budget constraint of discoms and allowing the problem to persist.

This tariff policy framework once had some logic. When administrative capacity was limited, redistribution had to be done through the price system, differentiating prices by end-user. But that is no longer the case. With direct benefit transfers and better targeting, subsidies can be delivered more efficiently — without distorting prices or taxing industry. If governments wish to tax industrial and commercial users, they should do so transparently through electricity duties. Over time, electricity should also be brought under the goods and services tax (GST), allowing firms to claim input tax credits. The current system of cross-subsidisation is a non-transparent substitute. Eliminating cross-subsidies, therefore, cannot be done in isolation. It requires a fundamental redesign of tariff policy — clarifying the roles of regulators, governments and discoms. Regulators should focus on technical and consumer protection functions, as the Telecom Regulatory Authority of India does. Governments alone should pursue equity — and bear its full fiscal cost. Unless tariff policy is revamped, India's discoms will be more obstacles than catalysts in the transition to a renewables-driven electrostate. And the war in West Asia is a grim reminder that India's dependence on imports of fossil fuels is high and has been rising. Resilience will mean reducing that dependence, which, in turn, will require an efficient electricity sector. The authors are, respectively, visiting fellow, Madras Institute for Development Studies; principal consultant, Centre for Effective Governance of Indian States; an independent consultant; and senior fellow, Peterson Institute for International Economics

OPINION

India's leapfrog moment

JAYANT SINHA

India confronts an extraordinary leapfrog moment. Its gross domestic product (GDP) per capita is expected to cross $3,000 this year — the threshold at which countries either accelerate towards high-income status or stall into prolonged middle-income stagnation. But India's moment is distinctive in a way that makes the standard development playbook insufficient and a bolder strategy not just possible but necessary. Three structural transformations are converging simultaneously for us: Building a highly skilled workforce to capture the demographic dividend, transitioning the energy system from fossil fuels to clean energy, and restructuring the economy around artificial intelligence (AI) and advanced automation. Each is consequential on its own. Together, pursued as a coordinated surge, they offer India the opportunity to leapfrog the middle-income trap entirely, compressing into 10-20 years what most countries have attempted sequentially over 40-50 years. The World Bank's 2024 World Development Report framed the development playbook. To escape the middle-income trap, countries must master a 3i strategy of investment, infusion of technology from abroad, and innovation. Each phase is pursued in sequence, with each building on the last. India cannot afford to sequence; we must pursue all three simultaneously. Skilled workers build and operate clean energy and AI infrastructure; clean energy powers the data centres the AI economy requires; and AI raises the productivity that makes high-income status achievable. This compounding effect is our leapfrog opportunity. China demonstrated what a coordinated investment surge at this income level can achieve. When China passed through the $1,500 per capita range in the early 2000s, it sustained gross capital formation at 40-45 per cent of GDP for over a decade. By the time it crossed $3,000 around 2008, the results were visible: More than 40,000 kilometres of high-speed rail, research universities with annual budgets in the billions, and manufacturing capacity that transformed the global economy. It was not a bet on one sector. It was a simultaneous surge across physical infrastructure, human capital, and industrial capability. The composition of this investment was as significant. Domestic corporate investment expanded rapidly as manufacturing capacity scaled across multiple sectors. State-directed credit flowed through large banking institutions into infrastructure networks, energy systems, industrial zones, and urban development. Government investment reinforced these trends through large national infrastructure programmes. Foreign direct investment also played an important role, bringing capital as well as technology transfer and integration into global manufacturing supply chains. Portfolio flows were relatively limited because of China's controlled capital account, but the overall scale of investment generated a powerful expansion of productive capacity across the economy. India's gross capital formation currently stands at roughly 33 per cent of GDP. At India's current GDP of approximately $4 trillion, reaching China's peak investment intensity would require an additional $300 to $400 billion annually, sustained over at least a decade. India's investment surge must first be funnelled into primary, secondary, and university education, and workforce skilling. India has the world's youngest large population, with millions entering the workforce each year. The $300 billion IT services industry, India's greatest development success of three decades, now faces progressive automation by systems being built in the United States and China. A young engineer entering the workforce today needs capabilities that India's institutions are not yet funded to provide. The entire government allocation for all 23 IITs combined is approximately $1.3 billion, against Tsinghua University's $5.7 billion. Skilling the workforce for the AI economy requires investment in research and teaching institutions at globally competitive levels. India's fertility rate has already fallen below replacement level: The demographic window that makes this investment so valuable is narrowing. The energy transformation gives India a structural advantage. India's solar and wind resources are among the best in the world, and the economics of renewable generation now favours rapid build-out. Several trillion dollars of investment in generation, transmission, storage, and green industrial systems would not only decarbonise the economy but also create the energy infrastructure the AI economy requires. Sovereign AI capability cannot be built on a grid that remains dependent on imported fossil fuels. The AI transformation is where the leapfrog opportunity is most visible. The US is committing trillions of dollars to establish dominance in AI computing infrastructure, frontier models, and semiconductor supply chains. The platforms, foundation models, and distribution architectures being built now will define the terms on which every other economy engages with the intelligence revolution. India has a billion users, the world's largest digital public infrastructure stack, and demonstrated capacity to set terms for global technology platforms. These are real sources of leverage, but we need to invest now in compute, data, and sovereign model capability. India has begun each of these transitions. The production-linked incentive (PLI) schemes, the National Green Hydrogen Mission, the massive renewable energy buildout, the semiconductor programme, and the AI mission all represent genuine commitments. The constraint is not vision, but scale. Each initiative, taken alone, is well below the threshold required to be transformative. The leapfrog opportunity requires that they be pursued together. Most importantly, this leapfrog moment demands a fundamental shift in how India deploys capital. India's financial system remains geared to short-duration lending; all three transformations require five- to 10-year commitments at high risk. What is needed is a constellation of investment vehicles — sovereign funds modelled on and scaled well beyond the National Investment and Infrastructure Fund (NIIIF) as well as corporate consortia collectively committing hundreds of billions of dollars to long-duration infrastructure and high-payoff research. We also need capital markets that structurally support such allocations through appropriate portfolio mandates for pension funds, insurance companies, and domestic institutions. China has mobilised state-directed capital at this scale. The European Union is debating the same architecture through the Draghi report. India must build its own version. The Samridh Bharat Indians aspire to is an achievable outcome of a coordinated investment surge across the three transformations already underway. The compounding returns are available to any country with the institutional capacity to claim them. What we need now is the national resolve and the investment intensity to convert this leapfrog moment into a leapfrog outcome. # बीड विमानतळाच्या कामाला गती; तांत्रिक सर्वेक्षण यशस्वीरीत्या पूर्ण

या महत्त्वाकांक्षी प्रकल्पासाठी बीड तालुक्यातील कामखेडा, दगडी शहाजानपूर आणि आहेर चिंचोली या तीन गावांतील सुमारे ३०८ हेक्टर खासगी आणि ११७ हेक्टर शासकीय जमीन प्रस्तावित करण्यात आली आहे. भारतीय विमानतळ प्राधिकरण आणि महाराष्ट्र विमानतळ विकास कंपनीच्या संयुक्त प्रयत्नांतून साकारणाऱ्या या प्रकल्पामुळे जिल्हाच्या औद्योगिक विकासाला आणि स्थानिक रोजगाराला मोठी चालना मिळणार आहे. सर्व तांत्रिक सोपस्कार पूर्ण झाल्याने आता प्रत्यक्ष विमानतळ उभारणीच्या कामाचा मार्ग मोकळा झाला असून बीडकरांच्या विमान प्रवासाची प्रतीक्षा लवकरच संपण्याची चिन्हे आहेत.

प्रयत्न करूनही सिलेंडर बुकच होईना; ग्राहकांच्या रांगा

छत्रपती संभाजीनगर, दि. ७: मागील अनेक दिवसांपासून घरगुती गॅस सिलेंडरा तुटवडा निर्माण झाला असून, त्यात विशेषतः कंपनीच्या ग्राहकांना मोठ्या अडचणीचा सामना करावा लागत आहे. सिलेंडर बुकिंगच होत नसल्याने नागरिकांना विविध पयऱ्यांचा शोध घ्यावा लागत असल्याचे चित्र आहे.

प्रशासन आणि गॅस एजन्सीकडून सुरुवात सुरुळीत सुरू असल्याचा दावा करण्यात येत असला तरी प्रत्यक्षात परिस्थिती वेगळीच दिसून येत आहे. शहरातील विविध भागांत नागरिकांना सिलेंडरसाठी लांबच लांब रांगा लावाव्या लागत आहेत. बुकिंग केल्यानंतरही वेळेत गॅस मिळत नसल्याच्या तक्रारी वाढत आहेत.
