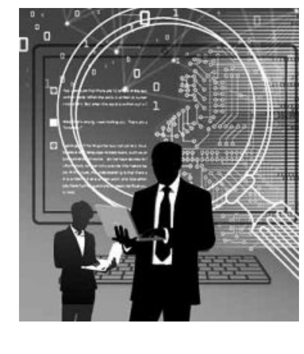
AI capability watch centre on the cards to assess risks

AASHISH ARYAN
New Delhi, 27 July



LIKELY TO BE ESTABLISHED WITHIN SIX TO 12 MONTHS, THE CENTRE WILL MONITOR DEVELOPMENTS ACROSS THE AI AND FRONTIER AI ECOSYSTEM AND IDENTIFY EXPERTS WORKING ON ADVANCED AI RISK ASSESSMENT

The government is considering setting up a capability watch centre to monitor the growing risks posed by artificial intelligence (AI), particularly those associated with frontier AI models, sources told Business Standard.

The capability watch, likely to be established within six to 12 months, will also monitor developments across the AI and frontier AI ecosystem, and identify experts working on advanced AI risk assessment, they said.

"We are discussing it with industry stakeholders as well. While the government can determine the policy, the relevant subject-matter experts will have to be invited to understand and interpret the latest developments in AI and give suggestions to help shape policy," a senior government official said, requesting anonymity.

The proposal has been put forward by the Technology and Policy Expert Committee (TPEC), an advisory body on AI constituted by the Ministry of Electronics and Information Technology in April this year.

The committee, currently chaired by IT Secretary S Krishnan, includes B Ravindran, professor at the Indian Institute of Technology (IIT) Madras; Rajat Moona, director of IIT Gandhinagar; and representatives from industry bodies Nasscom, the Manufacturers' Association for Information Technology (Mait), and the Data Security Council of India.

TPEC is a sub-committee of the 10-member AI Governance and Economic Group (AIGEG), also constituted in April. Chaired by Union Electronics and Information Technology Minister Ashwini Vaishnaw, the AIGEG is also expected to sharpen India's broader AI strategy by directing the bulk of public funding toward a limited set of use cases capable of delivering measurable outcomes within the next 12 to 18 months. Healthcare, agriculture and education are likely to be among the priority sectors.

The proposal for an apex AI governance body comes amid growing concern among experts over the rapid advances in large language models (LLMs) and tools such as Claude Mythos, which have demonstrated the ability to breach legacy software systems and existing digital defences.

Alongside the capability watch centre, the government is expected to encourage information technology (IT) and IT-enabled services companies to undertake large-scale workforce retraining to build AI capabilities.

"We would like companies to encourage employees to continue learning beyond their formal education. Given the pace at which AI is advancing and evolving, we will look at providing some form of support to help companies give employees access to tools and opportunities to solve real-world problems alongside their regular work," another official said.

To broaden AI adoption and usage, the IT ministry also plans to invite the Anusandhan National Research Foundation (ANRF) "to participate in fostering collaboration between scientists and AI researchers and advance the use of AI in scientific research," the official added.

Crypto framework will reduce underreporting, industry says

AJINKYA KAWALE
Mumbai, 27 July

- The framework applies to all crypto transactions starting 2026
- Crypto service providers have to identify reportable users and establish their tax residency
- Does not change the existing taxation regime
- Hope move would reduce the scope for underreporting

Indian crypto exchanges and companies have welcomed the guidelines issued by the Central Board of Direct Taxes (CBDT) on the compliance framework, detailing the reporting and due-diligence obligations of such firms. The Crypto Asset Reporting Framework (Carf) applies to all crypto transactions starting 2026.

Carf mandates crypto service providers to identify reportable users and establish their tax residency. The framework is being introduced at a time when tax authorities have limited visibility over cross-border crypto transactions and crypto assets.

The framework does not change the existing taxation regime for the sector. While it does not deal with regulatory aspects of the sector, it is being viewed as a step towards formal regulation.

"Even though the guidance note is focused on tax reporting rather than regulation, it lays an important foundation for a broader policy framework. As reporting standards become more robust, policymakers will be better positioned to develop balanced regulations that protect investors while enabling innovation. The industry has long advocated for regulatory clarity, and this marks another meaningful step towards a comprehensive framework for digital assets in India," said Edul Patel, chief executive officer (CEO) of Mudrex, a crypto exchange platform.

Industry executives said the move would help investors and companies by reducing the scope for underreporting.

"When regulated service providers follow consistent reporting standards, it becomes more difficult to underreport or conceal taxable crypto transactions through compliant platforms. This ultimately benefits responsible investors, compliant exchanges, and regulators by fostering greater transparency and trust in the ecosystem," said Vimal Sagar Tiwari, cofounder, CoinSwitch.

CBDT Chairman Ravi Agrawal had said the rapid growth of crypto assets had created a fresh challenge for tax administrations. Because these assets can be issued, held, and transferred outside the traditional financial system and across national borders, and they may escape the reporting obligations applicable to financial institutions under the Common Reporting Standard and the Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act.

Recognising this risk, the Group of Twenty (G20) mandated the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) to develop Carf as a dedicated framework for automatic exchange of information on crypto assets, he said.

Deeptech startup Yaanendriya raises ₹15 crore

UDISHA SRIVASTAV
New Delhi, 27 July

Deeptech startup Yaanendriya, which is building indigenous sensor, navigation and control technologies for robotics, aerospace and critical applications, has raised ₹15 crore from Mumbai-based venture capital fund Piper Serica.

Piper Serica has invested in deep-tech companies such as Pantherun, ClearTrust, Sixsense, Astrogate, Coratia, Sensesemi, Ubiqedge, and Enlife.

For the deep-tech startup, the fundraise represents its first institutional venture capital round. Before this, it had received non-dilutive grant and programme support from the Ministry of Heavy Industries, Department of Science and Technology, and the Government of Karnataka.

Incubated at ARTPARK, the firm plans to use the capital to strengthen research and development, accelerate product development, and expand its portfolio of high-precision navigation systems for mission-critical environments.

It is working on the SynCore series of navigation controllers for autonomous robotic platforms and the YDX series of high-precision inertial sensors deployed across global commercial applications. It is also developing navigation systems and a hardware-agnostic platform for space and critical missions, alongside high-precision Micro-Electro-Mechanical Systems (MEMS) inertial sensors for the space sector.

Yaanendriya has moved beyond the research and prototyping stage and has onboarded customers across defence and aerospace, drones and robotics, industrial automation and research applications. The company has more than 20 customers and over 10 memoranda of understanding (MoU).

One of its significant engagements is an MoU with the 515 Army Base Workshop in Bengaluru.

Vamshi Bharadwaj M V, founder of Yaanendriya, said the funding will help the company scale SynCore and YDX, strengthen its navigation and control platform, and develop indigenous MEMS sensors for the next generation of manned and unmanned platforms.

"Reliable autonomy begins with a system's ability to sense motion, understand its state, and control itself. We started with navigation controllers, expanded into high-precision inertial sensing, and are now bringing these capabilities together for increasingly demanding environments where conventional navigation may not be reliable," said Bharadwaj.
