NSE, Wharton to offer business course

TIMES NEWS NETWORK

Class IX and X students in India's tier II and III cities would now be trained by the Wharton Business school. Wharton's specialised global digital courses will be offered to students in smaller towns. The think-tank at the NSE and Wharton are in the process of designing developmental and customised content for the course based on materials developed by Knowledge@Wharton High School and Wharton Executive Education. This course will enable students to understand the intricacies of finance.

The course is a by-product of an MoU signed between NSE Academy Limited – a wholly owned subsidiary of National Stock Exchange of India Limited (NSE), Knowledge@Wharton (K@W) – the online journal of research and business analysis of the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania, and Wharton Executive Education (WEE).

will be delivered through a digital platform and will enable students to understand intricacies of finance.

Vikram

Limaye, MD & CEO, NSE, and Michael R Gibbons, deputy dean, Wharton School, signed the MoU at the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, US.

Limaye said: “NSE has always focused on awareness and knowledge as building blocks for creating a large and informed investor base, which is critical for strong and vibrant capital markets. This tie-up with K@W and WEE will bring together strengths of two great institutions to create financially-aware investors.”

Gibbons added: “The mission of K@W and K@W High School is to disseminate knowledge from Wharton to a global audience. We are delighted we have the opportunity to work with NSE to help share Wharton’s research and insights with high school students in India.”

NSE Academy, WEE and K@W will collaborate to educate high school students in India about finance and investment. They will also expand the K@W High School Investment Competition, which has been offered to high school students in India and other countries in recent years. In addition, they will jointly offer an online course for high school students.
