US announces H-1B visa overhaul, Indian techies to benefit

MANU KAUSHIK
New Delhi, December 18

THE US GOVERNMENT on Wednesday announced major reforms in its popular H-1B visa programme, a move that is expected to help thousands of Indian tech professionals.

The new rules will make it easier for American companies to hire foreign workers with special skills. It will facilitate a smoother transition from F-1 student visas to H-1B, a non-immigrant visa that lets US companies hire foreign workers in various occupations requiring advanced knowledge and technical competence.

The norms, to take effect in mid-January 2025, would also ease the visa processing time and streamline the issuance of these documents for skilled workers, students and entrepreneurs. In the latest overhaul, the Biden administration has reintroduced "prior deference" policy, which was dropped in the previous Trump presidency.

The revised regulations give the authority to US Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) officials to defer to previously approved H-1B visas when processing extension requests.

In addition, the new rules have changed the definition of "specialty occupation" under which the employers will have to clearly demonstrate that the degree field of the applicants is directly linked to the job for which the visa has been sought, thereby reducing the chances of misuse.

For students transitioning from F-1 visas to H-1B, the new rules will automatically provide the extensions to their student visa during the

HOW THE MOVE WILL BENEFIT INDIA

■ Reintroduction of "prior deference" policy to reduce delays in visa processing

■ Students to get seamless extensions to their existing F-1 visas while transitioning to H-1B

■ Overall fairness in the H-1B lottery system to combat frauds

■ More flexibility to qualify for cap-exempt H-1B visas

Year	Registrations
2021	269,424
2022	301,447
2023	474,421
2024	758,994
2025	470,342

application process.

Similarly, for non-profit and governmental research organisations, there will be far more flexibility to qualify for cap-exempt H-1B visas since the updated definition classifies research as "fundamental activity" as against the previous ambiguous definition.

Experts said that this is a timely refresher from the US Immigration Services which is better aligned to the current skill requirements of the US. "This will further help US strengthen its skilled workforce requirements and create opportunities for qualified skilled workers to apply to H-1B," said Karunn Kandoi, founder & CEO of Vidysa Education.

The new rules also aim to improve the annual H-1B lottery system by targeting duplicate registrations which will combat the fraudulent practices and strengthen the integrity of the sought-after H-1B programme. Even though H-1B has an annual cap of 85,000, set by the US Department of Homeland Security (DHS), the total number of H-1B applications for 2025 stood at 479,953 compared to 780,884 in the previous year.

Besides, H-1B beneficiaries in the petitioning organisation will now be eligible for H-1B status with 18 months of visa validity for initial approval and first extension.

In addition, the rules have enhanced the USCIS's Fraud Detection and National Security (FDNS) programme which empowers the agency to conduct worksite inspections, and specifying that the failure to cooperate would result in denial or revocation of the petition.

'Had fun but it's time': Ashwin bows out of internationals with shock retirement call

SRIRAM VEERA
Brisbane, December 18

RASHWIN STOOD IN the corridor outside the press conference room after the third Test ended in a draw. Captain Rohit Sharma, walking just ahead of him, gestured to the waiting journalists. "Sab pata chalega abhi (everything will be known now)," he said with a laugh, perhaps in reference to the buzz in the press box and on social media about the possible retirement of a "big player".

Behind Rohit, Ashwin seemed to be calming himself before his big announcement. He took a deep breath, composed himself and entered the room. The penny dropped when he said: "This is my last day... I had a lot of fun. I must say I've created a lot of memories alongside Rohit and several of my other teammates, even though I've lost some of them over the last few years. We are the last bunch of the OGs (originals)."

He said he would not be taking questions as he was feeling too emotional.

Rohit said he first got to know Ashwin's mind when he landed in Perth on the third day of the first Test, which the latter wasn't selected for.

On the first day of that game, just before lunch when the Indian top order was wobbling, Ashwin had already hit the indoor nets, bowling away.

Over the next couple of days, it became a regular occurrence. A couple of times, there wasn't even any support staff with him, as he kept whirring away.

All along then, as Rohit revealed on Wednesday, Ashwin had been contemplating retirement. Still, there was a burning desire to work on his craft.

He may be celebrated for his cerebral art, but Ashwin is an emotional cricketer. He once revealed to The Indian Express how a stray remark by his father, about his tendency to speak his mind hampering his career, made him retreat to a room and weep.

"THIS IS MY LAST DAY... I HAD A LOT OF FUN. I MUST SAY I'VE CREATED A LOT OF MEMORIES ALONGSIDE ROHIT AND SEVERAL OF MY OTHER TEAMMATES... WE ARE THE LAST BUNCH OF THE OGs (ORIGINALS)."

Unable to handle the flood of emotions, he would eventually consult a therapist. Of late, he said that he was in a "happy space", trying to gather as many "moments to remember" rather than stress about little things.

On the fourth day of the Brisbane Test when Ravindra Jadeja, the man who had replaced him for the game, was about to enter the tunnel to the dressing room, Ashwin lunged across from the dugout to pat him on the back and give him a wholesome smile. On the final morning, Ashwin and his Aussie counterpart, Nathan Lyon, chatted for a while a short distance away from the pitch. He then walked across to the warm-up area and patted Jasprit Bumrah on the back.

In Adelaide, where Rohit told him he would play, Ashwin sweated in the nets. On the day before the game, he had a long chat with head coach Gautam Gambhir.

He acquired information about the Adelaide pitch of recent vintage and watched highlights of those first-class games. On the morning of the match, he was seen pressing the pitch with his fingers, walking along its length. Later in the day, he was seen testing the direction of the breeze, letting tufts of grass fly.

So, it was no surprise that Ashwin was impressive with the ball in that game, even on a pitch not responsive to spin.

A couple of days before the Brisbane Test, his last day at the outdoor nets, he bowled a bit but didn't bat. Gambhir came across for a long chat and Ashwin padded up to bat. Gambhir gave him throw-downs, and bowling coach Morne Morkel fired several balls that kicked up chest and face-high at Ashwin from 17 yards. Ashwin hopped to pat them down, his last cricketing activity as an India player.

As he left the media room on Wednesday, Rohit was asked why this decision was taken in the middle of a series. The skipper uttered some empty words about how Ashwin's decision should be respected.

That may be so, but with two Tests left, and particularly when the final game is in Sydney where conditions can, at times, be spin-friendly, this is an odd call. Especially when the best spinner in the Indian squad, not just by reputation but even in how all three of them have bowled thus far in these three Tests, is Ashwin.

His decision and the management's inability to convince him to rethink does give an odd whiff to the entire episode.

On the fourth day of the Brisbane Test, sometime in the late afternoon when India were trying to avoid the follow-on, Yashasvi Jaiswal stood just outside the dugout with a ball, mimicking Ashwin's bowling action.

Ashwin smiled, asked for the ball, and kept going through his bowling action without releasing the ball. For a long while, his eyes were fixed on the action in the middle, but the right arm that won innumerable games for India kept ripping out only imaginary off-breaks.
